It was Kason Johnson's eighth birthday. There he was in Mountain Grove, Missouri hanging on to a lot of birthday balloons. But the Association of Mature American Citizens [AMAC] says he lost his grip and up they went, sky high and seemingly lost forever. Alas, they floated away. Five hundred miles later they made landfall in the yard of Todd Huyler in Cleveland, Tennessee. He found an envelope attached to the bouquet of balloons. It provided the address of Kason's school. Huyler wasted no time putting together a batch of goodies, as well as $100, sending them to Kason along with his Happy Birthday wishes.

County Commissioners Hear You

As many of you know, Montgomery County is being considered as a possible location for solar energy sites. During this exploratory time, your Montgomery County Commissioners believe it is important to gather as much information as possible on all sides of the solar energy question. Before any decisions are made, the Montgomery County Plan Commission and the Montgomery County Commissioners have as their primary goal finding the right and best answer for residents, or in other words, what makes the most sense for Montgomery County in terms of the future, safety and overall direction? Below are some of the questions that have been asked and the answers we have learned so far. Thank you all for your input! Your County Commissioners encourage you to continue the conversation. We are listening!

What are County Officials doing to address concerns about Commercial Solar Energy Systems?

 $oldsymbol{\Lambda}$ $^{oldsymbol{lpha}}$ Many members of the public have contacted County Officials regarding this important issue. Some citizens want to lease their land to solar developers in order to capture the economic benefits available to landowners. Some citizens oppose these developments. In August 2022, the Board of Commissioners adopted text amendments to the Zoning Ordinance which provided for enhanced setbacks and other changes designed to protect adjacent, non-participating landowners. Currently, the Plan Commission will continue to review the issues and may propose to the Board of Commissioners additional text amendments to the Zoning Ordinance.

Q: Is the County providing economic development incentives to the solar developers?

A: No. In June 2022, Cold Spring Solar, LLC requested tax abatement for its project, but the County Council denied this request. No other requests for such incentives have been received by County Officials.

Can the County prohibit commercial solar energy systems?

igwedge No, but it can consider changes to its Zoning Ordinance to restrict where the projects may be located, under what conditions such projects are allowed, and what process must be used for such approvals. These are the types of matters the Plan Commission is considering at this time.

Q: Who decides this issue?

A: The Board of Commissioners. The Plan Commission is advisory, and this means that it makes recommendations to the Board of Commissioners regarding possible changes to the text of the Zoning Ordinance.

Q: What is the timetable for consideration of changes to the text of the Zoning Ordinance?

A: If the Plan Commission makes a recommendation to the Board of Commissioners for text amendments, the Board of Commissioners will consider those proposed changes approximately 30 days after the Plan Commission certifies its recommendation to the Board of Commissioners.

Does the public have the right to be heard on such text amendments?

A: Yes. The public has the right to speak at both the Plan Commission meeting when the text amendments are considered and the Board of Commissioners' meeting when the text amendments are considered.

Are there restrictions on how far the County can go in regulating Commercial Solar projects?

 $oldsymbol{\Lambda}$ ullet Yes. There are several state law limitations and state and federal constitutional restrictions which apply to County planning and zoning. In its regulation of commercial solar projects, the Board of Commissioners must comply with these laws and restrictions.

The Comprehensive Plan indicates that the preservation of prime farmland is one of the primary purposes of planning and zoning in Montgomery County. Does the Comprehensive Plan require the Board of Commissioners to take action to preserve prime farmland and protect it from solar projects?

A: No, the Comprehensive Plan is a statement of objectives for future development, a statement of policy for land use development, and a statement of policy for the development of public ways, public places, public lands, public structures, and public utilities. The Plan is a vision for land use and development in the County. Although the Comprehensive Plan is a very important guide to land use policy, it is simply one of five factors the Board of Commissioners must consider when making amendments to the text of the Zoning Ordinance. These five factors are (1) the comprehensive plan, (2) the current conditions and the character of current structures and uses in each district, (3) the most desirable use for which the land is adapted, (4) the conservation of property values throughout the jurisdiction, and (5) responsible development and growth. The law requires the Board of Commissioners to consider the totality of all five factors. No one factor controls the decision.

Folly Of Electronic Voting Software

Using electronic voting software as the primary and sole method to record, tabulate, and report votes is folly because it's inherently insecure, incapable of being secured, and claims of it providing reliable election results are foolish. All electronic voting machines, aka devices, require software. It is software that controls the devices, and together, they make many of our current voting systems. We value accurate results with extreme reliability. Electronic Voting Software cannot deliver the value we expect, and we are being foolish to rely on voting systems entirely based on electronic voting software.

Most if not all electronic voting software is proprietary meaning few people know the code and all of its capabilities. Konnech, the PollChief election software provider, is one of the latest examples of the foolishness of relying on software. One person Eugene Yu, the deposed Konnech CEO, was able to hide his deceit from all PollCheif users and his ostensibly computer-savvy co-workers. It was happenchance that Los Angeles County uncovered Yu's deceit as they were investigating some other issue when they noticed their data on Chinese servers. Now L.A. County wants their money back for breach of contract. Marion, Lake, and Allen counties are known to use PollChief software and have spent lots of money on it. In 2017, Marion County inked a contract totaling $1.18 million. Yet, all that money has not rendered a voting system of great value.

Oh sure, county officials are quick to say that the PollChief software is not used for vote capture and subsequent result calculation, but that is irrelevant. The point is all software is vulnerable.

Unrelated to election software, but more to the point of software vulnerabilities, are the hacks of the Indiana Housing Authority and UKG (KRONOS). If UKG cannot keep my timecard and personal identifying information secure and my state government cannot keep its systems secure, why should I place any value on a voting system that relies on software?

My vote is valuable, and I demand a document reflective of that value. No vote-counting system is foolproof, but documentation is a reliable source for input to a system. We need a ballot that is capable of use with multiple methods of tabulation, which can be used for timely audits and validation of the primary method of tabulation. Some flimsy ballot with perforated chads for poking or circles for filling will not suffice, nor does a voter-verifiable paper audit trail (VVPAT) meet this need. VVPAT is a red herring to draw attention away from the fact that electronic voting software is recording your vote. It is the software that prints the VVPAT. The possibility for the software to print accurately, yet tabulate inaccurately exists. How timely would a VVPAT audit be? By what method would such a VVPAT audit be conducted? The genius behind VVPAT has not offered answers to these questions.

Sadly, our elected officials are spending our money on suspect voting systems that yield results of questionable value. Our elections are the foundation on which our government is built. The Founding Fathers rendered us a representative republic, and it is up to us to keep it. They understood the pitfalls of democracy. They limited our practice of democracy to Election Day, and we extended the practice to Primary Day. We must have election systems capable of forming the foundation needed to uphold our representative republic. Until we invest in voting systems capable of creating the needed foundation, we will continue to form discord rather than a more perfect union.

Reader Urges The Consideration Of Solar Positives

I'm writing in response to the recent number of Letters to the Editor from people opposing solar farms in Montgomery County. The letters seem to reflect personal anxieties and grievances that certainly are real to individuals, but these letters haven't considered the larger context. When we do look more widely at the production of solar energy (that our country is fast embracing) versus the production of coal and gas, a fuller picture of our nation's energy requirements in coming years emerges. Given the tremendous spike in energy costs of late owing to the Russian invasion of the Ukraine and Saudi Arabia's recent decrease in oil production, it is important to note that the current widespread use of solar power (here and everywhere) is much less costly, both in terms of dollars and in human health, than is the burning of coal and oil. As importantly, solar power is used in the region where it is produced. Panels are built with recycling in mind.

Solar panels are easily installed on a roof surface or on the ground, and they harness the free gift of light from our local star. Oil, on the other hand, is extracted from the earth at great cost, and that cost is not only in terms of dollars and cents. Oil extraction pollutes the atmosphere. When oil is burned, it also results in the degradation of the earth itself. This may be the elephant in the room, but the process of drilling, shipping, selling, transporting and occasional spilling, erodes our soils and pollutes precious ground water, resources not easily or ever recouped.

Solar power has a very different profile. The World Health Organization has found no evidence that the production of solar energy is harmful to human health: the extremely weak magnetic fields generated by electricity from solar panels and its transmission to the power grid has no effect on human health. The slight increase in temperature in the immediate vicinity is negligible. To have solar power available is a magnet both for farm and urban innovation. When John Deere's new ad campaign leads with "Run with us to an electric tomorrow," it's surely time to do some serious thinking about how we generate power for the sake of our shared future and for that of our children.

Currently 40 percent of our U.S. corn acreage goes to the production of ethanol, a so-called "biofuel," rather than to food production. Think of that cost: we are using fuel to grow a plant that we're turning into another carbon-dioxide-emitting fuel. Admittedly, I myself think that a field of corn ripening in the sun is far more pleasing to the eye than banks of solar panels. To me, though, a less polluted atmosphere and a much, much cheaper source of power needs to offset esthetic considerations. And, we don't have to think that the choice is either crops or solar panels either. Purdue University, among other innovators, is experimenting right now with solar panels on stilts, tall enough for combines to go under.

And, finally, given the recent cuts in Saudi Arabian oil production, increasing domestic solar energy production will make the U.S., including Montgomery County, less reliant on the whims of an unpredictable, foreign government.

the alarm as state legislatures allocate public education funds away from public schools in the name of school choice. Indiana's new education scholarship accounts, called ESAs, are the latest allocation of funds that should be budgeted for classrooms.

ESAs are grant-based scholarship accounts meant to fund "pre-approved education expenses, including tuition, therapies, assessments and fee-forservice transportation at pre-approved education service providers" for eligible students. ESAS became available in 2022 in spite of the concerns of former State Superintendent of Public Instruction Glenda Ritz as well as the president of the Indiana PTA Rachel Burke and Cathy Fuentes-Rohwer, President of Indiana Coalition for Public Education. Wisely, these leaders argued ESA funding can harm families and students as well. In a July letter to editors around the state, all three highlighted the downsides that parents will face if they elect to receive the grant money for their special education students.

Parents should be forewarned, they wrote. The ESA program falls under the Indiana State Treasurer's office, not the Indiana Department of Education (IDOE) and that changes rights for students. Quoted here are the six following downsides to applying for and using ESA funds:

1. Depending on the severity of your child's special education needs, the ESA may not cover every service your child

2. When you take an ESA, you are giving up your child's right to a Free and Appropriate Education under Federal Law and your child loses his or her due process rights. 3. If you choose the ESA option, the State provides no protections. The IDOE will not be involved, and the State Treasurer's Office has said it will not get involved in disputes. This is purely funding for private services. If the provider doesn't follow an Individual Education Plan (IEP), or mistreats children, or overbills, parents are on their own to resolve the situation. If parents need an attorney to resolve issues, they will be on their own to pay the attorney's

4. Providers who can be paid by this program are not obligated to follow the child's IEP.

5. Providers who can be paid by this program can refuse to serve your child at any time, for any reason, or for no reason at all.

6. Parents will be responsible for paying for the required state assessment for children whose families take an ESA for special education services. As yet, it is unclear how parents can access the test.

The implications are profound. Applying for an ESA could cost the parent money in the long run because their funds won't cover all the services a student needs. These cannot be used in public schools, local or charter. This means parents sacrifice rights they have in public schools and they must bear the full responsibility for finding and handling the testing and services. Finally, there are no guarantees of the quality of the

What are the upsides? It shifts part of the cost from the state onto families. In 2015, the Republican House Ways and Means staff put together "Indiana Education Funding, Explained" report to justify vouchers. The report noted the amount of money that the state saved with vouchers by giving vouchers. Choice vouchers were supposed to support low-income families who wanted to send their children to private schools. The report notes that the average Choice award for the 2018-19 school year "was $4,422 per student." Tuition averaged more than $7,000 dollars. Parents paid the shortfall. For school-choice people or those who favor privatization of education, the message is "we saved taxpayers money in exchange for choice.'

While it's probable that these families were relieved by the tuition break, the school choice program's hidden cost is that private schools fail to guarantee equity. While it's a parent's right to choose another form of education for their children, when they do so, the educations they elect do not guarantee students will receive services appropriate to their needs, nor that they will be allowed to attend the school that parents choose. Private schools do not have to accept any student nor meet specific including the educational system, can feel chaotic and choice gives a sense of control. But well-funded, free and equal public education is still proven to be the best for any nation, as Steven Kees wrote in his June 2022 contribution to the NORRAG blog. (NORRAG is the Network for international policies in cooperation in education and training). In response to the equivocating of UNESCO's report on education, Kees said years of neoliberal policies have often left public schools over-crowded, with poorly trained and paid teachers, few learning materials, dilapidated facilities, and often not close by. It is no wonder that some parents opt out. However, while it may be rational for disadvantaged individuals to sometimes send their children to private schools, it is poor public policy to encourage it – it increases inequality, it ignores the public interest, it neglects public schools, and it ward, a lot of them would get together at watering holes to quench the thirst they worked up.

A lot of friends were made.

Of course it wasn't all sports. That's just what I was mostly exposed to. There were art fairs and motorcycle rallies and theater outings and on and on. The world wasn't all peaches and cream by a long shot, but it sure didn't feel as divided as it does now.

OK, enough old guy reminiscing.

As I looked through the Spirit & Place web site (www.spiritandplace.org) I noticed something called Powerful Conversations on Race. It reads: "Powerful Conversations on Race (PCR) is a monthly community dialogue series exploring topics around race, racism, and the resulting impact. These sessions provide a means of getting comfortable talking about uncomfortable topics and are rooted in humanitiesand arts-based materials and sources.

Each month we'll choose 1 or 2 readings and other source materials such as art, music, poetry, lyrics and videos to ground our conversation. Facilitators trained in the Civic Reflection Dialogue Method will use these materials to further support and push our discussion into deeper examination and reflection on our underlying beliefs around race and racism in America and its implications. It is not necessary to read or engage with any of the source materials before we meet. In fact, we encourage everyone to come to the table as is.

This IS NOT a lecture or book club, but rather a space for community to come together and dive deeply into a variety of topics concerning race. Active participation is expected."

Again, I think this is a good thing. I've pounded on my little soapbox for years and years that civil discourse is needed. The more that happens, the better off we'll all be.

But one of the related topics that often comes up when race is discussed is getting rid of statues and monuments related to the old South, the Civil War and anything that reminds us of the dark time our country went through.

Perhaps that won't happen at this event? Perhaps these participants are better than that? I hope so.

Let me back up. I have not talked with any of the Spirit & Place organizers. So perhaps they don't condone tearing down statues from a dreadful period in our history. I simply don't know, and am not accusing them of anything. My point is much simpler. How can efforts to rewrite (at worst) or ignore (at best) history be a good thing? The very real fact is that our nation went through some ugly, ugly times. Do we think by ignoring it we are changing it? Do we think erasing the physical reminders will make it OK? Have we not learned that those who ignore history are doomed to repeat it?

Honestly, I don't know how anyone in their right mind can defend racism. There's no part of any sort of bigotry that's OK. We are becoming more open and accepting as a people, and there is nothing bad about that. If Spirit & Place really does produce honest conversations that help bring people together then more power to it.

Two cents, which is about how much Timmons said his columns are worth, appears periodically on Wednesdays in The Paper. Timmons is the publisher of The Paper and can be contacted at ttimmons@thepaper24-7.com.
