...Meet Phebe

KAREN ZACH
Around The County

Decided it was time for a lady and was just perusing my database when I discovered that this gal was one of 18 children (can you imagine) so thinking she'd make a great topic for the ATC article this week, off I went on the quest! A few of her brothers and sisters (Mary, Derrick, Warren, Benjamin, and Tom LaBaw) passed young. Derrick died on the first day of the battle of Stone River, in Tennessee on the last day of the year in 1862. Right afterward, Ben died in Bowling Green, Kentucky 4 Jan 1863 of lung fever. Others lived long lives, her half-brother, Alonzo being 90 and others in their 70s and such.

So, meet Phebe Jane LaBaw, named for her mother which was good since Phebe was the third and last daughter born to her mother, Phebe Crane LaBaw before Phebe Crane passed away (after two more boys, dying not long after giving birth to Elijah) 24 April 1852 having just turned 40. Benjamin Butler LaBaw her father remarried Elizabeth Ann Smith just a few months after Phebe's death. She must have passed away as he married again in 1862, then died five years thereafter.

Benjamin Butler farmed in Shawnee Township but several of his children lived in Montgomery County, Phebe Jane herself buried in Waynetown Masonic. He also had property in Warren County that he left to his last wife and her son, Elmer, as well as the household goods mentioned as hers at their marriage. His home farm in Fountain was given to Thomas A's children as he preceded his father. To: Phebe Jane, John, Elijah, Alonzo, Elizabeth Ellen and Melissa Alice received his library, household goods and the like. Loved that son Lewis had planted 13 acres of wheat and he "should have those profits." Horses his son John could select, as well as the milch (milk) cows, heifers, hogs and chickens that Ben had on the place. Ben did not wish a sale

Witham Health Services Celebrates National Hospital & National Nurses Week

National Hospital Week, the nation's largest healthcare observance is May 7th-13th. This National Hospital Week, the American Hospital Association will follow the theme #WeAreHealthcare – recognizing the amazing people who work in America's hospitals and health systems. In addition, National Nurses Week starts on May 6th and ends on May 12th, Florence Nightingale's birthday. According to the American Nurses Association, "these permanent dates enhance planning and position National Nurses Week as an established recognition event". Every year, nurses are recognized for their service and dedication to caring for others and improving the health of patients.

Coincidentally, Witham was officially founded on May 13th, 1915. In honor of these national observances along with the celebration of Witham's establishment in Boone County, this week has been named "Witham Week". To celebrate, the Witham team has employee festivities planned for each day. With Alma Mater Monday, Twin Tuesday, Witham Wear Wednesday and Superhero Thursday as a few examples, you may see some unusual dress around the Witham campuses this week. Other activities planned include selfie stations, prizes and treats to celebrate the teamwork and dedication of its employees and all they do for our community.

National Hospital and National Nurses week provides an opportunity to thank all of the dedicated individuals – physicians, nurses, therapists, engineers, food service workers, volunteers, administrators and so many more – for their contributions. Every community has healthcare professionals that work day and night to provide care on the front lines of public health while coming up with innovative ways to support the needs of their community members. Hospitals and health systems are supporting public health nationwide by ensuring equitable access to care, leading innovative research and educating the public on prevention and wellness. "This important week gives us all the opportunity to celebrate those that provide hope and healing, and who support the health and well-being of their communities through dedication and care from the heart." said Kelly Braverman, President/CEO Witham Health Services.

Thank you, Boone County, for choosing Witham Health Services as your healthcare provider of choice`

What Are “Forever Chemicals” And What Makes Them So Bad?

Dear EarthTalk: Why are “forever chemicals” so bad, and how can I avoid them?

“Forever chemicals” are types of highly persistent and toxic synthetic chemicals widely used in many industries, including firefighting foam, non-stick cookware, food packaging and water-resistant clothing. These chemicals are called “forever” because they do not break down easily in the environment and can persist for decades or even centuries, accumulating in soil, water and air.

The most common types of forever chemicals are per- and poly-fluoroalkyl substances (PFAS), which include compounds such as perfluorooctanoic acid (PFOA) and perfluorooctane sulfonic acid (PFOS). PFAS have been linked to a range of health problems, including cancer, immune system damage, hormone disruption and developmental delays.

The problem with forever chemicals is that they can accumulate in our bodies over time, as well as in the bodies of animals and plants, leading to long-term health and environmental consequences.

Because these chemicals do not break down easily in the environment, they can also contaminate soil, water and air, potentially impacting entire ecosystems.

To avoid exposure to forever chemicals, there are several steps you can take. First, avoid using non-stick cookware and other products that contain PFAS. Instead, opt for stainless steel, cast iron or ceramic cookware.

Secondly, avoid using products that are labeled water-resistant, stain-resistant or grease-resistant, as they may contain PFAS.

Thirdly, use natural, organic and biodegradable cleaning products instead of conventional cleaning products that may contain PFAS.

When shopping for food, choose products that are packaged in glass, metal or paper containers instead of plastic containers, as plastic can contain PFAS.

Finally, if you live in an area where PFAS contamination is a concern, consider installing a water filtration system that is designed to remove these chemicals.

According to the non-profit Environmental Working Group, a watchdog organization that tracks contaminants and chemicals in food, health and beauty products, nearly all Americans, including newborn babies, have forever chemicals in their bloodstreams, while 200 million of us may well be drinking tap water contaminated with these toxins.

And we’re not the only ones at risk. Researchers have found traces of forever chemicals in wildlife all over the world, including some endangered species. Who would’ve thought that such a risk would threaten polar bears in the Arctic let alone tigers, monkeys and pandas in milder locales and even dolphins and fish across the world’s oceans?

Forever chemicals have been ubiquitous in our ecosystems and bloodstreams for decades, but it wasn’t until March 2023 that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) started to address the issue by setting Maximum Contaminant Level (MCL) goals for PFAS and related persistent chemicals in drinking water supplies.

While this might be too little too late for those of us exposed to these toxins year after year, at least it’s a step in the right direction.

“Decades of unchecked use and releases of PFAS chemicals have devastated the planet by contaminating people, drinking water, and food, including fish and wildlife across the globe,” says Tasha Stoiber, a senior scientist at EWG.

“The proposed nationwide standards to limit exposure to PFAS in drinking water are a welcome development to address the harms these toxic chemicals have already inflicted upon individuals and communities.”

Does Elon Musk Really Understand?

Dear EarthTalk: Why is Elon Musk so blasé about the world running out of water, especially after decades-long droughts and rising temperatures?

The billionaire entrepreneur and CEO of SpaceX, Tesla and Twitter recently commented on Bill Maher’s show Real Time that “desalination is absurdly cheap,” going on to say that since the surface of the planet is 70 percent water, he isn’t worried about running out anytime soon.

But Musk’s optimism on this topic is countered by environmental leaders who believe that water scarcity is a pressing global issue.

Desalination is the process of removing salt and other minerals from seawater or brackish water to produce fresh water.

The most common method is reverse osmosis, which involves forcing seawater through a membrane that filters out the salt and other impurities.

While its cost has decreased in recent years, it is still more expensive than other sources of fresh water such as collecting rainwater and pumping water from underground aquifers.

Desalination costs also vary depending on factors such as location, energy costs and the size of the plant.

In some cases, desalination can be prohibitively expensive.

However, it is true that the world has plenty of water in its oceans and other water bodies.

According to the United Nations, 97 percent of the world’s water is in the oceans (and as such, salty), while just three percent is freshwater.

And of that three percent, two-thirds is frozen in glaciers and polar ice caps, leaving only a small fraction of the world’s water available for human use.

Water scarcity is a pressing global issue, particularly in regions that experience drought or have limited access to fresh water sources.

According to the World Health Organization, around 2.2 billion people lack access to safe drinking water, and this number is expected to increase as a result of climate change and population growth.

Desalination can be a viable solution to water scarcity in some regions, particularly those with access to seawater or brackish water sources.

However, it is not a panacea, and there are several challenges and limitations associated with it.

One of the biggest challenges of desalination is its energy consumption.

Desalination plants require a significant amount of energy to operate, typically electricity.

This can be a significant barrier in regions with limited access to affordable energy sources or that rely on fossil fuels for energy production.

Another challenge of desalination is its environmental impact.

Desalination can have negative impacts on marine ecosystems and generate greenhouse gases.

The intake of seawater can harm marine life, and the discharge of brine back into the ocean can create high-salinity plumes that can harm marine ecosystems.

Musk’s optimism most likely stems from bullishness on transitioning to renewable energy.

Once we can deploy large scale solar collection facilities at the site of desalination plants, the greenhouse gas and energy cost downsides of desalination mostly disappear.

While such a scenario has only been a dream in recent decades, recent advances in technologies may bring about large scale desalination facilities all over the world in the next few decades.
