➤ THREE THINGS You Should Know:

1 Greg Potter was fishing off the coast of Waihou Bay in New Zealand when a shark rocked his pedal boat. But the shark was not assaulting Potter; it was chasing a seal. In the aftermath of the encounter, he told reporters: "When the seal hid under the kayak, the shark came crashing up from underneath and smashed into the bottom of the kayak. Then they did another few laps around the kayak, and then a second time, the shark again smashed the underside of the kayak." It was no silly fish story. Potter recorded the encounter.

2 In the fable, Rapunzel used her incredibly long hair to escape the clutches of a witch. Tami Manis of Knoxville, TN grew her unusually long head of hair because she liked it that way and, as a result, she got herself a page in the Guinness Book of World Records. She trims the front and sides of her hair but she hasn't cut the hair in the back of her head since 1990. Her mullet measures 5 feet, 8 inches.

3 The cops in Norfolk, NE got a shock when they spotted a car with a full grown bull sitting in its passenger's seat. They had gotten a call that there was "a car driving into town that had a cow in it," according to Police Captain Chad Reiman. They thought they were going to find a calf in the car but when they got to the scene they saw that it was a huge bull. The car's owner had modified the automobile to accommodate his enormous passenger. The police gave the driver a warning and sent him home.

It's the week after Labor Day. Did you a) buy a mattress or appliance? b) get snarled on busy highways or in airports? c) relax from your labors? And d) hear or read about the state of labor and unions in the U.S.? This isn't actually a fluffy BuzzFeed quiz. You pick the points you earn from checking off any of those, but if you didn't read or hear much about labor, then you can give yourself a point for finishing this column.

What we're talking about when we're talking about labor transcends employment statistics. We're discussing labor from the perspective of people, not disembodied economies.

We're starting with support for unions because unions transformed working conditions, pay rates, time off, and benefits starting as far back as the 1880s (here in Indiana.) But union support slipped from the 1980s until the past few years. Then in 2022 and 2023, nearly two-thirds of Americans said they support unions, according to Gallup polls.

Not that more Hoosiers sought out collective bargaining or joined their local union. Whereas 22 percent of employed Hoosiers were covered by unions in 1989, only about 9 percent are presently covered, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

In 2012, Indiana jumped on the Right to Work bandwagon, joining 25 other states where lobbying and educational campaigns against unions had eroded their contribution to bargaining for fair wages, safer working conditions, and benefits such as retirement and healthcare. Fiscal conservatives leaned on the sentiments of Milton Friedman, who wrote in Free to Choose: A Personal Statement that free, meaning unregulated, markets will always sort themselves out and provide better outcomes for the economy.

But "better outcomes for the economy" are not the same as better outcomes for lower and middle-class households. A strong economy doesn't simply trickle down to small-town Americans. Wages for those socio-economic classes have stagnated since the 1970s compelling many Americans to cobble together a 40-plus-hour work week from multiple part-time jobs.

Many workers lack health insurance because it's generally tied to having the right kind of job. Costs of healthcare have risen such that we pay higher premiums, have higher deductibles and accrue more out-of-pocket expenses. Notably, Americans pay more for healthcare and live shorter lives than people in nations with universal healthcare, as Nicholas Kristoff and Sheryl Wudann report in their latest book Tightrope: Americans Reaching for Hope. In spite of arguments about U.S. innovation in American healthcare, our system is not improving health. Furthermore, Kristoff and Wudann report that low and middle-class Americans diagnosed with cancer depleted their household funds within two years of diagnosis, leaving crushing financial crises for their living loved ones.

Amazingly, aid distributed to households and local governments during the pandemic - from childcare funds to straight-up cash - temporarily eased the crush on working-class families, but that couldn't last. Money

Hey Boomers, Looking For Something To Do . . .

TIM TIMMONS

Summer doldrums are over - fall is just 16 days away. And before the final few days of another season slip away from our lives forever, some of us find ourselves longing for a little bit of fun. You know, like we used to have when we were little kids and left the house after breakfast and played outside all day long? Trouble is, life's not quite the same now. For those of us still working, well, there's that. My retired buddies tell me they are busier than they used to be. So there's that. What's a Boomer to do?

Here are a few ideas. Maybe some will fit you, maybe some won't. Like a lot of things in life, it's your call.

1. Wait till dusk and go catch fireflies. It might already be too late, but perhaps you can find a few stragglers.
2. Play a practical joke on someone. OK, don't be mean and don't do it on anyone who won't appreciate it. But for those who do, a good one is worth more than a few laughs.

3. If you still have a record player, pull out the old albums and listen to one or two. Closely. All the way through. Remember when we did that as kids? We could spend hours listening to the songs and coming up with our own meanings to them.

4. Read a comic book or color in a coloring book. If you don't have any old ones, there are plenty of new ones - although you might be shocked at how different the storylines are now.

5. Got a spouse or significant other? Have a seat on the couch and make out. Oh c'mon, this is a family newspaper and I'm not suggesting anything more. But remember how much fun it used to be just to kiss? I'll bet you'll find it still is - and I'll certainly bet you'll both laugh and enjoy it more without the teen-age angst.

Fewer Hoosier Kids Take Advantage Of Free Summer Meals, Despite Ongoing Hunger Challenges

A New Food Research & Action Center Report Shows Decline In Breakfasts And Lunches Served In Indiana.

By Casey Smith
Indiana Capital Chronicle

Thousands of Hoosier kids are missing out on free breakfast and lunch, even though nutrition advocates say many Indiana families continue to struggle with hunger and food insecurity.

That's according to a new report by the Food Research & Action Center (FRAC), a national nonprofit that aims to reduce poverty-related hunger.

FRAC's report indicates that nearly 58,000 fewer children in Indiana received a lunch on an average day in July 2022, a decrease of more than 50% from the previous summer. Data for 2022 is the latest to be released.

Participation rates for breakfast fell even further as 60,000 fewer children received breakfast on an average day in July 2022, a decrease of about 81% compared to July 2021. The decline in participation follows previous increases in summer meal participation in 2020 and 2021.

Across the country, every other state also saw a decrease in the average daily participation in summer lunch in July 2022 compared to July 2021, according to FRAC.

As we've returned more to normal operating procedures, we just don't have the ability to reach as many kids with as many meals. — Emily Weikert Bryant, executive director Feeding Indiana's Hungry

Child nutrition waivers issued by the U.S. Department of Agriculture make the free meals available at summer meal sites, oftentimes located at schools and community centers.

While waiver access was expanded during the COVID-19 pandemic, eligibility restrictions are back in place, meaning fewer kids can access free meals.

"During the height of the pandemic, families could drive through summer meal sites and pick up multiple meals for a few days, making the process a whole lot easier for many," said Emily Weikert Bryant, executive director of Feeding Indiana's Hungry, an Indianapolis-based nonprofit focused on increasing Hoosiers' access to food. "As we've returned more to normal operating procedures, we just don't have the ability to reach as many kids with as many meals."

Although state and federal officials have piloted new programs to get additional kids fed, Bryant said many still lack access to nutritious foods.

"Congress addressed this with a couple of new options that were piloted and developed during the pandemic but they seem unlikely to address child nutrition programs again soon," she continued, emphasizing that "summers add an extra level of hardship for families at risk of hunger."

Summer meal options

The two federal summer nutrition programs — the Summer Food Service Program (SFSP) and National School Lunch Program (NSLP) — provide funding to serve meals and snacks to children at sites during summer vacation or the extended breaks of year-round schools. The programs also can be used to feed children during unanticipated school closures.

The SFSP is a federally-funded, state-administered program that reimburses approved program operators who serve free, healthy meals and snacks to children under age 18 in low-income areas when school is not in session.

Sponsorship is open to public and private nonprofit groups, including local governments, summer camps, religious organizations and recreation centers. Organizations may also consider partnering with an existing sponsor, such as a school corporation, to serve students in areas where kids lack good nutrition during the summer months.

Separately, the NSLP is available for schools that operate summer school. Only the students enrolled in summer school can receive a meal, however.

The FRAC report indicates the number of SFSP sponsors and sites decreased from July 2021 to July 2022.

Specific data obtained by the Indiana Capital Chronicle from the Indiana Department of Education shows there were 280 sponsors and 2,035 sites statewide that provided summer meals in 2021. That decreased to 192 sponsors providing summer meals at 1,047 sites in 2022.

FRAC experts and state officials attribute much of the decrease in participation to the reintroduction of limitations on summer nutrition programs.

Prior to the pandemic, to qualify as a summer meal site, at least 50% of the children in a given geographic area had to be eligible for free or reduced-price school meals, or at least 50% of kids participating in the program at the site had to be individually determined eligible for free or reduced-price school meals. Sites that primarily served migrant children also qualified.

Once a site was determined eligible, all children who come to the site can eat for free, regardless of their economic or migrant status.

Through the program, a sponsor enters into an agreement with the state education department to run the program and receives reimbursement for each eligible meal and snack served at meal sites.

That changed, though, during the pandemic — from Spring 2020 through Summer 2022 — when states could utilize a nationwide child nutrition waiver that allowed any community to have a summer meal site.

Although waivers were technically available for Summer 2022, Congress did not extend the waivers again until late June, which IDOE officials said was "too late" for Indiana's SFSP operations.

This year, federal meal program eligibility returned to standard procedure, meaning only low-income areas were qualified to participate.

FRAC noted that program staffing shortages, supply chain disruptions and many meal sites shuttering as a result of the pandemic additionally led to fewer children receiving a summer lunch in 2022 and 2023.

Why are fewer kids participating?

FRAC's goal is for all states to feed summer lunches to 40 kids for every 100 children who received free or reduced-price lunch in the 2021-2022 school year.

As of July 2022, just eight students in Indiana received a summer lunch per every 100 students who ate school lunches during the regular academic year, according to FRAC.

To meet the nonprofit's goal, the Hoosier state would need to increase the number of students served summer lunches by more than 200,000: from 54,445 kids to more than 268,000. That equates to more than $19 million in additional federal reimbursement dollars for summer lunches.

Bryant applauded IDOE for a program piloted this summer that allowed additional meals sites in rural areas. Kids in certain parts of the state were able to access meals without having to be present at that site to eat the meal, "which is a big step toward increasing summer meals," Bryant said.

"We need to see more of this — not just in rural areas — but anywhere, because we know it's not just finding a location but getting to it each day to sit and eat the meal on site that can be difficult," she added.

Bryant and FRAC also pointed to federal legislation adopted in December 2022, creating a permanent program that will provide an Electronic Benefit Transfer (EBT) card to purchase food during the summer months to families eligible for free or reduced-price school meals, extending the summer benefits families have received through the Pandemic EBT Program. The legislation takes effect next summer.

"It's a great step forward because SNAP benefits don't go up in the summer when kids are eating at home," Bryant said. "These innovations, borne from the pandemic, will help more children access what they need when they're out of school. What will be important going forward is insuring these programs are as accessible as possible by encouraging Congress and the administering agencies to reduce barriers to program access, streamlining program administration to encourage more site and agency participation, and insuring the benefits are adequate to really be helpful."

She said families can also access food banks and food pantries in the summer — or any time — for extra help stretching their grocery budget.

Still, FRAC is urging policymakers to improve summer meals access. At the state level, that includes better advertisement about summer meals to families, as well as more financial support for summer food sponsors to increase the number of available meal sites. More broadly, the hunger relief organization called on the federal government to lower the eligibility threshold from 50% to 40%, and to make permanently increase funding for summer and after school programs where meals can be served.

3 Ways People Of All Ages Can Give Back

(StatePoint) No matter your age, it's likely you've questioned your ability to make a difference. Research from the global nonprofit Points of Light shows that 73% of people believe that volunteering is more important than ever, yet 66% think they can't make a big impact in their communities. Activists on the ground prove otherwise. That's why Points of Light, which is dedicated to inspiring and equipping people to take action, has recognized thousands of volunteers for their contributions to their communities through The Daily Point of Light Award.

"Points of Light's research found that Gen Z is the most civically engaged generation to date. Our youth honorees demonstrate that people of all ages can strengthen communities and solve persistent problems," says Diane Quest, interim CEO, Points of Light.

To inspire you to action, the organization is sharing the stories of youth honorees, along with three elements from The Points of Light Civic Circle®, a framework for helping individuals get civically engaged:

Volunteer
Nonprofit organizations and NGOs need volunteer power to deliver support to the communities they collaborate with. If you're an adult wanting to facilitate youth volunteerism, consider organizing a youth-specific event or helping transport the young people in your life to an event. To find a volunteer opportunity that aligns with your interests and availability, check out Points of Light Engage, a database with hundreds of thousands of in-person and virtual volunteer opportunities.

The power of volunteering is apparent when considering Daily Point of Light Award honoree Nate Buescher, a high schooler who prepares food for a local food pantry and distributes home-cooked meals to tent cities around Chicago. Buescher began fighting food insecurity at age 7 with the Honeycomb Project. Today, he mentors younger volunteers while maintaining his own service projects.

Voice
The youth voice is vital, pointing us to which concerns are most important to future world leaders and helping broaden perspectives. Use your voice to advocate for causes you care about by posting on social media, attending a rally or contacting a government leader. Adults can amplify youth voices by sharing with their networks, or organizing forums for youth to be seen and heard.

Seventeen-year-old Daily Point of Light Award honoree Maanit Goel used his voice when organizing a rally of fellow activists on the Washington State Capitol steps to support legislation protecting the Chinook salmon and orca populations. He also regularly addresses state legislators, and travels statewide to speak to K-12 students about environmental issues.

Listen and Learn
Social justice and environmental issues are nuanced, involving many people with different perspectives shaped by their own experiences. Listening and learning is one way to honor others' lived experiences and get a fuller scope of an issue.

Young people can commit to thoroughly researching causes they care about, talking to those working toward solutions and holding space for those impacted. Adults can connect with the young people in their lives, inviting dialogue that allows for sharing different perspectives and finding common ground.

These are the driving ideas behind the work of high schooler Kristie To, who became a leading force in Asian American racial justice when she founded Hearts Against Hate. Among the initiatives of her nonprofit is distributing Asian history and Asian American Pacific Islander civil rights curriculum to children.

"Cultural sensitivity starts with exposure, and that's what we're trying to do with these elementary schoolers," says To.

To learn about other avenues for social engagement, check out the Points of Light Civic Circle by visiting pointsoflight.org/civic-circle.

"There are many formal channels for civic engagement, but simple actions make a difference too," says Quest. "Whether it's carrying groceries in for a neighbor or donating books to the library, the important thing is to get started when you see a need in your community."

does have to come from somewhere.

It's why people work. A job that pays well and isn't dangerous imbues a sense of industriousness and satisfaction and improves psycho-social well-being as much as well-spent leisure time. A job like that exists because ethical organizations listen to the collective needs of their workers. People need to be able to cover their bills and have some left in order not to live in a state of heightened anxiety. All workers deserve work-life balance, that ability to come home ready to engage without job-and-pay-related stress to foster strong relationships with their partners, children, families, friends, and neighbors.

That's where unions are proven to help.

Consider a recent report on joint training and credentialing partnerships between employers and unions. Those joint partnerships invested more money in apprenticeship training than employer-only programs, as the Midwest Economic Policy Institute reported in 2023. The report from MEPI looked at construction apprenticeships and found that union-employer partnership programs trained more skilled workers than other programs. Indiana Public Broadcasting's Adam Yahya Rayes reported in August that between 2015 and 2022, 43 percent of students graduated from union partnerships and earned an average of $31.28 per hour. Graduation rates at Ivy Tech were lower, near 36 percent during that time, and graduates earned an average hourly wage of $22.60. Employer-only training programs graduated at about the same lower rate as Ivy Tech and earned much less, an average of $17.47 per hour.

Unions transformed lives starting back in the age of the Robber Barons, namely Andrew Carnegie (steel tycoon), Jay Gould (stock market trader), Jim Fisk (cotton trader), John D. Rockefeller (oil tycoon) and Cornelius Vanderbilt (empire of steamboats). Carnegie and Rockefeller made their millions on the broken bodies of their mill workers.

A field trip to a coal mine in Pennsylvania breaks open the stories of the men who bought their own dynamite and brought their young sons to work with them in near pitch-black mines. Young boys had to pay off their family's debt to the company store when their fathers were blasted to death or injured. Mothers help families eke out a living by working in the silk factories, taking their daughters with them. Visit one of the mining museums in Appalachia and you'll hear stories from docents whose grandparents were miners. When a man died in the mine, fellow miners deposited his corpse on the front stoop. If he was injured, their friends laid their broken bodies on the kitchen table under the one bare bulb a shack was likely to have, that way the family could see to doctor him.

Upton Sinclair's The Jungle chronicles such exploitations in the meat packing industry. Companies sold houses on contract at obscene prices to their workers. Bosses assaulted their female workers, and the jobs were so dangerous that workers were frequently mutilated or killed. First published in serial form in 1905, The Jungle horrified readers, but not for the right reasons. Descriptions of rotting meat contaminated with toxic chemicals, dirt, sawdust, and rat droppings appalled American consumers.

"I aimed at the public's heart," Sinclair said, "and by accident, I hit it in the stomach." Instead of worker protections and unionization, the public called for and got food safety inspections.

Unions saved lives. Today their work may seem less urgent. Maybe most workers' conditions seem bearable enough. Then again Texas just enacted a law that prohibits workers from taking extra water breaks. Today, some meat packers wear diapers on the job because they aren't allowed enough bathroom breaks. Amazon has notoriously tracked every move of workers demanding faster order packing. White-collar workers now have their computers monitored for keystrokes, meetings, and activity so bosses can monitor them every minute.

Maybe people can scrape together enough money to make rent, juggle the bills, and get groceries. Then again, Credit.com found that 73 percent of Americans die with an average debt of $62,000. Clearly, we aren't making our budgets, and it's not just because we aren't spartan enough.

When financial analyst Kevin Chrissey bemoaned American Airlines giving its workers a raise, saying "Labor is getting paid first. Shareholders get the leftovers," that's a wake-up call. The system isn't working. We need collective bargaining. We shouldn't die owing our lives to a credit card company, hospital, or corporation.

een-themed story and send it to us.

- Don't exceed 750 words
- Connect your story to Crawfordsville and / or Montgomery County somehow.
- The writing must be your own and original. You must own the rights to it and sign a release stating as such and giving us permission to publish it.
- Get it to us by noon, Sept. 29.

Pretty simple. Four winners will be selected and those stories will be published, along with the author's name and photo, in October. If the judges select any stories as honorable mentions, those will be published on our web site.

We'd suggest dusting off the cobwebs - unless cobwebs, creaky stairs and paintings with moving eyeballs are appropriate to your story - and getting busy. You know the first rule of writing, right? But in chair! So get yourself situated in front of a keyboard and let those fingers fly!

Tell us a ghost story, a spooky tale, perhaps a fiction piece about the ghost of Gen. Lew or Henry Lane, or perhaps a tale spun up from one of the pre-consolidation high schools. That's the great thing - it's a Halloween writing contest, so the who, what, where, and when are all up to you!

How do you enter? Simply e-mail your story to news@thepaper24-7.com or drop it off at our beautiful downtown Crawfordsville office (127 E. Main). If you e-mail, please copy and paste the story in the body of the e-mail and not as an attachment.

But wait, that's not all! We're also looking for Montgomery County's best Halloween-themed house. It seems like more and more people are going all out for the spookiest of holidays. Well, we'd like to see them!

All you have to do is send us a picture of your house, include the address and your contact info and we'll share some of those with our readers in The Paper and online.

6. Stay off your phone, computer, social media, internet and all that stuff for a day. Heck, you grew up without any of it. What did you do to occupy your time then? Do it again.

7. Go play. Maybe it's with Barbie's, maybe it's one-on-one with a basketball? What is it that trips your trigger? Have at it.

8. Write a letter. Maybe you can write to an old friend you haven't seen in a few decades? Maybe it's to someone who already passed? Maybe it's to your better half today? Your call.

9. On the other side of writing is reading. Find someone to read to and open a book. You'll both enjoy it.

10. Maybe you can do this one and the last one at the same time - visit an old friend.

11. Go to a church. Yeah, sure, go to the service. But ever visit a church when there's no one around? Sit in a pew and spend a little quiet time. What a great time to be thankful, or to be reflective, or both.

12. If you go outside and walk or run or ride your bike all the time - good for you! But if not, try it. I LOVE the Sugar Creek Trail, but even winding your way through a neighborhood or a country road is worthwhile. It's amazing the things we notice at slow speeds that we completely miss in a car.

Say so long to summer in style - and maybe say hello to a little fun. Enjoy!
