Memories of the Great Depression

Are you one of those people who complain about BUTCH inflation,

DALE debt, the Columnist rising costs of food, gas, housing, health care, etc.? Do you despise going to work every day and not being paid enough? Well, brighten up, buttercup! It could be a lot worse. In 1999, Margaret Wray interviewed local residents who grew up during the Great Depression in the 1930s.

Alva Fidler . . . "Dad died when I was 7 weeks old. It was tough for my mother to make a living for herself and my sister and me. She did washing and ironing for people to help make ends meet. My family and I survived with help from kind people who had compassion for a widow and her children. The township trustee supplied fuel to help heat our home, and farmers at butchering time would bring meat to help feed us. I helped mow, trim and dig graves at the cemeteries. I was paid 30 cents an hour. In 1937, I managed to save $10 to buy a 1921 Model T Ford. I graduated in 1938 and worked for Sam Stewart in the business of heating and plumbing, 10 hours a day, six days a week, for $9 a week."

Dora Cohee . . . "Times were beginning to get really bad.

The Darlington bank closed and that was where all our money was. Our washer wore out and I can still see my mother washing clothes on a wash board under a tree in our yard. She had so many overalls to wash that her knuckles would bleed before she got done. My older brothers quit school to work on farms. Mother had always cut our hair and made all the girls' dresses coats, and hats. Taking our lunches to school, we always had peanut butter with Mother's good sliced pickles on it. No one had any money to go places, so you made your own fun."

Marian Johnson . . . "I was 10 years old when the

One of five educators who will contribute to the Teaching Literacy in Montgomery County Forum on Tuesday, Tharp noted that "the ability to read "impacts the quality of life for an individual, and eventually it can impact the family. If you have struggled with reading, it impacts your livelihood probably in a lot of different ways that you think about the individual, the family structure, but then ripples out to the community and to workforce development."

The forum, which begins at 6 p.m. at Crawfordsville High School Commons, includes a panel of four educators, Brittany Cooper, CCSC Director of Elementary Education, Wendy Myers, Southmont Director of Student Services, Lisa Walter, MCCF Early Childhood Coalition, along with Anthony Tharp, PhD, and will be moderated by Kathy Steele, PhD, former CCSC Superintendent. They will discuss their schools' shift to data-driven, tried-and-true reading instruction. They want parents and community members to understand the link between literacy and

OBITUARIES

Patsy Stephens August 12, 1941 - April 7, 2024

Patsy Lou Williams Stephens born August 12, 1941, to Bryce and Edith Willams of New Market, died April 7, 2024.

Patsy went to school at New Market High School. She graduated in 1959.

Patsy married Ed Stephens June 28th, 1959, and would have celebrated 65 years of marriage in June. Ed and Patsy have 3 children.

Proceeding Patsy in death are both her parents and her brother Dean. Surviving is her sister Peggy (John) Dixon, husband Edward, daughter Debbie Barnett (Jack), Cindy (Beth) and son Terry (Pam), 4 grandchildren and 11 great grandchildren.

Patsy was a yell leader during her school years and an obvious extrovert. She loved people and didn't know a stranger. Upon landing on the island of St Martin we were met with a woman yelling "Patsy, Patsy" across the tarmac! She knew someone everywhere we went!

Patsy loved sports and through the years participated in community volleyball and softball. She was an avid basketball fan, especially IU. Patsy attended all her kids, grandkids, and great grand kids' events, ever the most enthusiastic fan! She was an avid euchre player and belonged to 3 card clubs! She loved her card friends and made it known, no one messed with her card days!

Her love for sports and cards was trumped by her love for her family. Patsy worked alongside Ed, farming and running a business, but it was her home and family where she put her heart. She loved to feed everyone and everything. The stray cat Bozo is the best fed stray in the county!

Patsy was a member of the Double Dozen Home Ec Club for many years. Patsy was infamous for her homemade noodles. She loved cooking for her family and never failed to bring her specialties to each family gathering wherever it might be. She was a skilled hostess and whether it was July 4th at the lake, Thanksgiving on the farm or most recently Easter at her grandsons, she made each holiday special for everyone!

James Randall Garrett

October 28, 1933- April 4, 2024

James Randall Garrett, of Crawfordsville, passed away peacefully at home, surrounded by his family on April 4, 2024. He was 90.

Randall was born on October 28, 1933 in Norwood, Kentucky to Henry and Mabel Elliott Garrett. He graduated from New Ross High School where he was his senior class Vice President and Salutatorian. He served six and half years in the National Guard. Randall then worked as a proofreader and art worker at R.R. Donnelley's for 41 years.

Randall married the love of his life, Lucille Bailey on June 28, 1952, she survives. He was a 50+-year member of First Christian Church, where he was an elder, chairman of many committees, taught Sunday school, and went on many mission trips to New Orleans. Randall was a long-time committee member for the Strawberry Festival and helped build many sets for the Sugar Creek Players at the Vanity Theater. He walked many miles at the Sugar Creek Trails. Randall had a deep love for art, painting, and photography. But most of all, Randall's joy in life came from spending time with his grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Survivors include: wife, Lucille Garrett; son, Phillip Garrett; grandchildren, Neil (Melissa) Garrett of Swansea, Illinois, Elizabeth (Jared) Kirby of Crawfordsville, Indiana, and Allison (Brian) Pyle of Crawfordsville, Indiana; greatgrandchildren, Leah, Callaway, Sawyer, Ava, and Bryson; brothers Lee and John Garrett and several nieces and nephews.

James was preceded in death by his parents; brothers, Jerry and Victor Garrett; and infant sister, Joy Elizabeth.

Visitation will be at Burkhart Funeral Home on Thursday April 11, 2024 from 11 am to 1 pm. Service will follow at 1pm, led by Pastor Darla Goodrich. Burial will follow at Oak Hill South Cemetery.

Public Invited to Learn about Teaching Literacy in Montgomery County

On Tuesday at 6 p.m. in the Crawfordsville High School Commons, a panel of teachers will speak to the public about how our children learn to read in Montgomery County. Panel members will represent all three school districts and our early childhood coalition. While this is a program of interest to everyone in the public, parents of pre-school and school-age children are especially invited to come to learn, to share experiences, and see ways that we can all support literacy in our community.

In recent years, and especially since the pandemic, state statistics on literacy rates in Indiana have been concerning to many. This has led to the perception that we have a literacy "crisis" in the state and to a push for schools to move to adopt the science of reading. Here in Montgomery County we face these challenges in helping our children learn to read, but our schools have robust reading programs that are aligned with one another, and are effective. This is not to say that there are not many challenges. Each panel member will address a crucial piece of the reading landscape in our schools, and how parents can help build a strong foundation in children early in life.

Panel members for the evening include: Wendy Myers (South Montgomery), Lisa Walter (MCCF Early Childhood Coalition), Brittany Cooper (Crawfordsville), and Anthony Tharp (North Montgomery). Dr. Kathleen Steele, retired superintendent of the Crawfordsville Community School Corporation will be the panel moderator.

During this lively session, audience members will be encouraged to think about their own literacy formation, and there will be an opportunity for Q&A after the presentations. Attendees will also be eligible for door prize drawings for gift cards to local cafes. Courtesy of Random House, children's books will be given away free.

As citizens it behooves us to understand more fully how reading education happens in our Lisa Walter county, what our county statistics are, and how we can work as a community to support our parents, our teachers, and our children as we together to be a more fully literate community.

The panel will address these issues and others. Audience members will see footage of teachers and students engaged in the "learning to read" process.

worst of the Depression hit. The boys seemed to get new pants and shirts once in a while, but the girls usually wore handme-downs from aunts, cousins, etc. We didn't buy much canned goods. Mom homecanned everything so a tin can was something to hold on to. Dad's health was pretty bad. The doctors thought he had cancer, and didn't have long to live. All of us six kids were still at home. This was a long time before insurance and Social Security, so he was trying to figure out a way for Mom to be able to raise us. We built a chicken hatchery from used bricks and ran that for eight years."

Don Weliever . . . "Dad bought the farm right before the Depression. For years after that he had to pay $84 interest twice a year. The insurance company didn't care about the principal, they wanted the interest. As soon as he paid one, he had to start saving for the next payment. We ran a dairy, bottled milk and delivered it in town. Dick and I sold horseradish that Mother made. When we were in high school a lot of us boys joined the National Guard. We were 15 years old and were supposed to be 18. They paid $13 per quarter, which was good money then."

Ed Kirkpatrick . . . "I recall eating lots of rice cakes made from rice left over from breakfast. Mother used grated orange peels for furniture polish. Two upstairs bedrooms were not finished until Mother covered them with cardboard. In the winter we used horse blankets for warmth. My grandmother made my shirts from old men's shirts. Mother darned many socks. You could buy shoe soles and heels at the dime store to repair worn shoes."

Billie Wilkinson . . . "Darlington had hobos who rode the railroads in those years. Some came to our door and Mother always had something to give - sandwich, apple, coffee and cookies.'

Compared to the past, today's economic woes aren't so bad. Just be smart with your money. Ladies, if your bigspender husband buys something he doesn't need just to impress someone he doesn't care about, inform him that eventually he will have to sell something he DOES need. And to you guys out there who are married to shopaholic women . . . if someone steals your credit cards, I suggest that you DO NOT report it. The thief will spend less than your wife.

If all else fails, you still have options. Purchase lottery tickets and pray. Lock yourself in the closet. Claim insanity and be placed in an institution. Drink. Remember what Jerry Seinfeld said . . . "Dogs don't have any money. They are broke their entire lives. But they are happy. Of course, it could be because they don't have pockets."

John "Butch" Dale is a retired teacher and County Sheriff. He has also been the librarian at Darlington the past 35 years, and is a wellknown artist and author of local history.

becomes - win or lose. If Israel walks away now, then it can simply begin counting the days until the next Oct. 7. And just for the record, Israel has indeed stated it will stop fighting if Hamas releases all the hostages and surrender.)

Still, I get it. The optics a word I hate - look bad. And in today's world, optics are important. Forget facts. Forget justice. Forget reality. It's about appearances.

Let's go back in time a ways, shall we? How about 80 years?. We're now in 1944. Franklin Delano Roosevelt was president, serving his fourth term. A year later, almost to the day, he would be dead and Harry S. Truman would serve as our country's 33rd president.

Almost immediately, he was faced with a monumental decision a decision perhaps larger than any since Abe Lincoln's term during the Civil War.

A plan was in place to build an atomic bomb. The bomb was so powerful that Truman's advisors told him it would force Japan to end the war.

Now remember, by that time we had gone from shaky ground to oddson favorite to emerge from WW II victorious. U.S. troops defeated Germany less than a month after Truman was sworn in and the war in the Pacific was inching ever closer to Japan.

Thing is, it was slow going. And slow meant deadly. U.S. boys were dying daily and the estimates of how many GIs would lose their lives in a direct invasion of Japan were staggering. Some generals said as many as a million U.S. servicemen would wind up casualties of war.

The atomic bomb - the Manhattan Project was supposed to avoid all that.

You know the outcome.

Truman decided to drop the bomb. Twice. Estimates of those killed in Hiroshima ranged up to almost 150,000. In Nagasaki it was 80,000.

Almost a quarter of a million people killed.

By us.

Most of whom were women, children, elderly and not soldiers.

Think if that happened today.

Those who care about optics would lose their minds.

Forget the fact that we were at war with Japan. Forget the fact that we offered them the opportunity to surrender. Forget the fact that they started the war with a sneak attack that killed a couple thousand of us.

Starting to sound familiar?

The weight of that decision is something I'm sure none of us can understand. Truman knew, he had to know, that his signature on one simple order would result in babies being killed, mothers, children, wives . . . Yet, he also knew that if he didn't sign it, babies, mothers, children, wives would lose countless fathers, sons and husbands.

No one celebrated those deaths. No one felt even remotely good about it. There is nothing good about war. Nothing.

But when you are in one, the objective isn't optics. It isn't political correctness. It's winning, and hopefully preventing future wars. God bless Harry Truman for bearing the weight of that decision in the manner he did.. We live in a different world today - certainly better in some ways, not so much in others. But when it comes to Israel, history stands repeating.

personal empowerment. Strong reading skills give individuals agency in every aspect of life, from acing a job application to teaching yourself new skills to getting cultural references in your favorite show to bonding with your child or grandchild over a classic book.

The term you might hear is the "science of reading," which merely means teachers are ensuring that they are teaching reading skills from preschool up with research-based practices. It means they are pacing the process to meet students at their developmental stage.

Tharp noted that Montgomery County educators across corporations have already implemented research-driven reading instruction, a process they began as they focused on methods to address dyslexia. The science includes identifying and naming each stage and testing the techniques that work best at that stage. It starts with phonemic awareness, which simply means helping students recognize and manipulate sounds within words. For example, helping a student know when the letter E makes the short 'eh' sound versus the long e 'eeee' sound or is silent. Or why c-h makes the ch sound, and so forth. When we learn the patterns of when an "e" makes different sounds, we can attack unfamiliar words, test out what works, by breaking a word into smaller parts, then putting it back together as a whole.

The next stage, phonics and word recognition, looks at how those sounds work together to create words. Like the "ee" between m and k or "ea" between m and t both make the same sounds. Phonics helps readers learn how individual sounds are dependent on the sounds around them. Helping students decode these relationships helps them determine which word they're reading. If they've never heard the word, they can still sound it out, and with some related knowledge determine what it means as they hear it used. Word and sound recognition require adult intervention, Tharp noted. We might think it's adorable when our kids says li-bary instead of lib-rary or pah-sgetti to spagh-etti, but we also need to help them hear the correct sounds.

"Phonics and word recognition is really just teaching students to recognize and manipulate the sounds within words," said Tharp. Strong readers know how to break a word into individual sounds, use what they know about dependencies, and figure out syllables, then put syllables together into words. "Once they understand the pattern, they can then transfer to other patterns." To help their readers, any parent can play a few games to improve students' skills. Tharp suggested that parents can help at home with reading simple fun books in the evenings. Keep your fingers on the sentence without a lot words as you read, showing kids left to right, "a basic ability that we need to ensure students know," said Tharp. "Practice letting them read, pointing from one word to the next. Then have them read cereal boxes during fluency. breakfast. Play I Spy while you're traveling down the road. If your kids come home with a word list, try to have them find those words in the text around them."

Once emerging readers can use what they know to tackle an unfamiliar word by its parts, they can develop word fluency. That's where they recognize the word from seeing it so often, they no longer need to sound it out, part by part. Their next step is sentence fluency, where they can read word to word in a sentence and understand the sentence as a larger chunk, an idea. At first, this requires simple read alouds that are re-read until students can read nice fluid sentences without a lot of breaks. At first, Tharp noted, they're "not fixated on comprehension of understanding that sentence. They're just being able to read that of pauses and with a smooth expression." All of this takes practice and multi-sensory approaches, which Tharp said most districts are doing through structured literacy programs that increase leads to reading comprehension. To get there, teachers need to check each student's oral reading fluency with a simple two-minute test that measures how many words a student can read correctly within two minutes. Teachers will monitor the growth trajectory for our students and use that to evaluate their own effectiveness in reading instruction.

Once kids can read passages smoothly, it

Finally, students will expand their vocabulary. "I love vocabulary because you can practice in everyday life with everyday things. Those basic conversations at the kitchen table you can quiz your kids on what they think that word means. If they use that big word, unpack it," said Tharp. But even every day words merit a conversation. "A word that I love to unpack all the time is good. When I hear someone say you did a good job, I ask them to define good for me. We tell students all the time to behave or be good, like, but what does that mean? You're going to have a lot of deep rich conversations because there are a lot of interpretations. But as you're building vocabulary, you'll hear from young scholars with their impression or interpretation of vocabulary words, what it means to them," Tharp said.

Reading and writing are two complex, multi-level skills. They improve with practice at home and in school.

"We would love for parents to get time in their busy schedules to just read with their kids and talk about what they've read with their kids," said Tharp. He encourages parents and grandparents to ask questions, and let the readers ask back. But also, "reading is best enriched by experiences. Anytime our students can make that text itself or self-totext connection with what they're reading or what they're doing, such as from a trip to grandma and grandpa, visiting parks and libraries, or other places, then they can make that true real-life connection. That's when comprehension just explodes."

Tharp cited an older study from the 1980s, where lower-reading level and upper-reading level students had to take a quiz about baseball after reading about it. Because both groups had experienced baseball, they performed similarly on the reading comprehension quiz. Why did both groups score similarly when one group couldn't read as well? They both had the background knowledge to improve their reading comprehension.

The hope that teachers can improve reading scores and empower students has everyone across the school districts "beyond excited" and "teaching like their hair's on fire," said Tharp. He believes teachers have more clarity and intrinsic motivation, realizing they can learn from, not Tharp encourages parents to foster and protect their children's curiosity, encourage them to take risks, let them fail and try again, and answer their questions with more questions.

Tharp, like the other panelists, loves reading. He recently finished reading Lawnboy by Gary Paulson with his 9-yearold son, which gave them an opportunity to discuss the economic terms and opportunities. He also reread The Knowledge Gap by Natalie Wexler, a book about science of reading. The event, Teaching Literacy in Montgomery County, is sponsored by the LWVMC, the Montgomery County Community Foundation and the three school districts. Community members are invited to join the event which begins at 6 p.m. April 16 at Crawfordsville High School Commons.

feel shame about, what hasn't worked. They're more collaborative, planning and testing their instruction together. Part of that is reframing the idea of "failure." Failure is part of learning anything new, from reading to how to help every single kid to learn to read. Fall down nine times, get up ten, as the saying goes.

Following this presentation, Dr. Steele will entertain questions from audience members. The more people are in attendance, the richer the conversation will be. The ability to readliteracy-is the cornerstone of any democratic society. On that ability rests the capacity to understand, analyze, and make informed decisions about issues of public concern. These are the "jobs" of well-informed citizens in a democracy and prepare people to make informed choices when they vote. The public is cordially invited to attend this important program about how teaching reading works here in Montgomery County. Social media, as well as national and state press can mislead and confuse our perceptions about what is happening in our own schools. Come and be better informed about how our Montgomery County public schools perform one of their biggest jobs: teaching children to read. THE PAPER

Montgomery United Honored

Dine With a Doc Coming Up in Greencastle

Senior Education Ministries, Inc. has scheduled Dine with a Doc- Greencastle: the fourth Monday of every month from 10 a.m. to noon at the Putnam County Hospital.

Dine with a Doc is a free community-based program that welcomes the local senior public to get to hear an enjoying a complimentary lunch.

This program is a community effort of a doctor, a lunch sponsor, the senior citizens, local churches and area businesses coming together for the good of all to serve the senior citizens.

Each doctor has time in effort to listen, hear, and answer your medical questions while sharing a meal with you. Various community businesses also participate by donating door prizes or providing complimentary lunch for you to enjoy and learn about ways they may help you as well.
