Teddy Bear of Bumpkin Hollow....

BUTCH DALE Columnist

When I was born in 1948, my Grandma Dale gave my parents a children's book that had been published that year. The title was "Teddy Bear of Bumpkin Hollow," written by Sharon Boucher. When I was older, my parents read that book to me, usually before bedtime. They read several other Little Golden books, too, but I liked the Teddy Bear book the best. I took it with me when I stayed overnight with my grandparents, and Grandma Dale also read the book to me. By the time I was 4, I had memorized the book. As they turned the pages, I recited the script and dialogue word for word. By the age of 5 I could also actually read a few other simple books, so my parents decided it was time for me to start first grade.

In thinking back, I believe I enjoyed that book because it was a reflection of my personality at that time. It starts out, "Teddy was a little brown bear. He was just about the cutest little bear that ever lived in Bumpkin Hollow. But he had one very bad habit. No matter what his mama told him to do--he wanted to do just the opposite." Yes, when I was very young, my parents struggled to control me. I managed to get into trouble on a regular basis. I was what they refer to now as the strong-willed child. "No matter what Mama wanted him to do, he didn't want to do it."

In the storyline, Mama and Papa bear send Teddy on an errand to Honey Bee Hive to fetch a bucket of honey. They tell him to be back by 10 o'clock, and if he does, he will have a pleasant surprise. But Teddy doesn't follow their advice and gets sidetracked. He takes the long path through the

Ah, September. This year's pumpkin-spice-eve month is more than a chance to put huge half-skeletons on your front lawn and start planning your costumes for the Feast of the Hunter's Moon. Or Halloween, if you're one of the many who say that's their favorite holiday. Who can fault folks a little joyful distraction from the 24-7 ramp-up to Election Day?

But September is more than pre-October month. It's Hispanic American History Month. For that reason, there's no better time to feature Ellen Ochoa - phenomenal astronaut, entrepreneur, leader, mother and Hispanic American - and learn some life lessons from her.

Ochoa logged over 1,000 hours in space. She is the recipient of NASA's Distinguished Service Medal, Exceptional Service Medal and Outstanding Leadership Medal and the 11th director of the Johnson Space Center.

A family centered person, Ochoa was born on May 10, 1958, and grew up in Mesa, Calif. with four siblings. Her parents divorced when she was in middle school, during which Ochoa threw herself into learning to play the flute and excelling in school. Though Stanford offered her a full scholarship for her undergraduate degree, she elected to stick close to her mother and siblings, so she attended San Diego University.

Ochoa married Coe Fulmer Miles, a research scientist she met at Ames Research Center in 1990, took her trip to space in 1991, and gave birth to the first of her two children in 1998. While she was a devoted mom, she took additional short trips to space while her boys were young. Decades later, when her younger child graduated from high school, Ochoa retired. At that point in her career, she'd invented new technologies, implemented ideas in space and led the Johnson Space Center to become a more agile, streamlined operation.

Ochoa graduated from San Diego University with a physics degree and initially weighed a future either in business or as a classical flutist. Instead, her mother persuaded her to pursue her master's at Stanford University where she earned a master's (1983) and PhD (1985) in electrical engineering. At Stanford, she designed innovative optical systems that could "see" and analyze objects.

WE ARE officially one week away from the 23rd anniversary of Sept. 11. It seems so long ago, yet still vivid. Gas prices were under $2, Janet Jackson and Nickleback were on top of the music charts, Harry Connick Jr. was in his early 30s as was famous pro wrestling manager Paul Heyman.

George W. was in the White House, but the Democrats didn't seem to mind so much. Oh for sure we had political divisions, but nothing like we see today.

God forbid, but if terrorists killed a few thousand Americans now, how would we react? I mean we have Americans, true blue Americans, who somehow think the murderous group Hamas is worth defending.

Here's hoping we don't find out - and that all of us can unite for at least a little while and honor those who lost their lives that fateful day, and all the heroes who stepped up.

ON A MUCH less somber note, did you buy a lottery ticket in Lebanon or Southport recently? Two Powerball tickets - one sold

THREE THINGS You Should Know

- 1 An early-season outbreak of epizootic hemorrhagic disease in deer, which started in the northern region of Indiana, has been detected by the Indiana DNR. Humans are not at risk for contracting EHD, a viral disease that commonly affects white-tailed deer and is transmitted by biting midges, aka sand gnats or "no-see-ums." A significant number of suspected EHD cases have been reported in deer in Wabash, Allen, Pike, Warrick, Miami, Huntington, and Porter counties. Deer infected with EHD may display unusual behaviors such as lethargy, excessive salivation, or disorientation. Anyone who finds a deer that is showing signs of EHD or finds one dead in water is asked to report it at on.IN.gov/sickwildlife.
2 Gleaners Food Bank of Indiana's annual fundraising event, Gleaners Huddle Against Hunger, presented by the Indianapolis Colts, will be held on the field of Lucas Oil Stadium on Tuesday evening, Oct. 15. All net proceeds will go directly and solely to Gleaners Food Acquisition Fund to acquire food for Hoosiers facing hunger in Gleaners' 21-county service area in central and south-central Indiana. Guests will enjoy complimentary food and beverage, free parking, on field activities, historic memorabilia from The Jim Irsay Collection and engagement with the Indianapolis Colts.
3 September marks the 29th anniversary of a statewide celebration of archaeology in Indiana. Throughout the month, A variety of events for all ages will be offered by universities, museums, organizations and individuals throughout Indiana, coordinated by the Indiana Department of Natural Resources Division of Historic Preservation & Archaeology. A schedule is at on.IN.gov/archaeologymonth. Overall, archaeologists have recorded more than 75,000 sites in Indiana since the early 1800s.

Ochoa graduated from San Diego University with a physics degree and initially weighed a future either in business or as a classical flutist. Instead, her mother persuaded her to pursue her master's at Stanford University where she earned a master's (1983) and PhD (1985) in electrical engineering. At Stanford, she designed innovative optical systems that could "see" and analyze objects.

Entrepreneurial and innovative long before she trained to be an astronaut, Ochoa took a position at Sandia National Laboratory in New Mexico where she developed "optical, computerized recordings and models and phenomena in space," according to Lemelson MIT's newsletter. Ochoa sought and earned patents as co-inventor for three devices: one that "inspects objects;" another that "identifies and can 'recognize' objects;" and a third system "that minimizes distortion in the images taken as an object." The work helped create crucial systems for space travel. After those accomplishments, she worked at Ames Research Center, headed teams and developed computer systems for aeronautical expeditions. Her innovations "had the potential to improve not only the gathering of data but also the assessing of the integrity and safety of equipment," noted MIT.

That's a solid way to work one's self into becoming an astronaut. Ochoa and her husband moved to Johnson Space Center, where she had to study astronomy and develop physical fitness in order to qualify to be sent into space.

During her 1,000+ hours in space, she conducted studies on Earth's atmosphere and climate, helped deploy satellites and participated in a study on damage to Earth's ozone.

Leadership-driven, Ochoa served NASA for 30 years, always with a pragmatic eye for the way the future would unfold. NASA's funding dropped from about 1 percent of the national budget in 1992 to half a percent in 2013, where it's hovered. During the years when the shuttle program shuttered and NASA faced cuts in funding, Ochoa had the vision to help NASA look to future partnerships with private companies. She helped the Johnson Space Center focus on agility, adjusting its mission and vision.

"We're well versed in that through our ISS Program where we bring together NASA Centers, international partners, commercial companies that both have spacecraft as well as payloads. You can see that very same kind of thing happening for gateway where you have all these different variety of partners. But you still need to integrate, need to understand how do you actually help each one of these partners achieve what they want to achieve. In some cases it may not be that closely related to what NASA is using it for, but we still want to enable a variety of different activities," said Ochoa in archival interviews in 2017.

Ochoa encouraged a workplace that fostered diversity in the space program. As she told Women's History, "Leadership and technical/operations skills are valued in aerospace ... Women simply needed to be given the chance to demonstrate those skills, instead of being dismissed." While she led the Johnson Space Center, they employed "diverse panels for promotions and selections for development programs, let people volunteer for informal development opportunities, support employee resource groups, encourage mentoring, and track how we are doing, for all underrepresented groups."

Looking toward the future, Ochoa read Andy Weir's The Martian and encouraged others at Johnson Space Center. Ochoa's vision toward Mars inspired her to bring Weir in to speak.

"What I really liked about [The Martian] was that it really captured the operations culture that we have here at NASA," Ochoa said in recorded interviews for the space center's archives. "A lot of it just sounded so familiar in terms of how you would respond to scenarios and how an actual astronaut stranded on Mars would think about, 'What do I need to do to survive, what's the first thing that's going to kill me, what's the next thing, what's the next thing?' That's exactly how we train — trying to understand what are the risks, what are the hazards, how do I prioritize, how do I work through all of these things. Then of course, once he was able to get back in contact with Earth, having the team on Earth work with him, which is exactly what we do in human spaceflight."

Though Ochoa retired in 2018, the year her youngest graduated from high school, and moved to Boise, Idaho, she left NASA with a direction that's inspiring researchers as close to home as Purdue University.

Bonus content: on Sept. 12, Purdue is debuting Boilers to Mars, a short film and will feature a panel of speakers. For those inspired by space, register to attend the event at 7 p.m. on Sept 12. Interested in chasing space? There's more here: <https://boilers.tomars.com/> woods and stops to talk with Mr. Frog at the icy stream. When he returns late, Teddy finds Cousin Amanda sitting in Mama bear's chair. "Your mama and papa left here at 10 o'clock this morning. They went to visit Grandma and Grandpa Bear. You could have gone with them if you had been back on time." Teddy ran over to his little soft bed, buried his head under the pine-needle pillow, and cried and cried and cried."

"Late that afternoon Mama and Papa Bear came home. Teddy had been thinking. When he saw Mama Bear, he ran to her. He put his arms around her. 'I won't EVER be a naughty little bear again,' he promised. 'Of course you won't,' said Mama Bear. 'Look what Grandma Bear sent for you--big chocolate cookies with white sugar frosting. And she wants you to come and see her next week.' And Teddy went."

Every young child must learn to obey their parents and do as they are told. For some, this process takes a little longer. I am a prime example. As a young child, I liked to do things MY WAY. But I learned. Sometimes by the painful method..."Bend over and grab your ankles!"...I eventually "straightened up" and did what I was told. I could relate to Teddy, and I imagine that many of you can, too.

Reading books to your child has many benefits. It will improve their cognitive function, mental agility, vocabulary, thinking skills, and memory. It will also help in their social and emotional development, and studies show that it will help them handle their feelings and build empathy. Reading together helps parents and children to connect in a positive way.

I have the "Teddy Bear of Bumpkin Hollow" book framed and hanging on the wall at my house. I remember those special times that Mom and Dad and Grandma Dale read to me. The book also reminds me that in life all of us occasionally get sidetracked and off the straight and narrow path just as Teddy did. But fortunately, we learn from our mistakes and make changes for the better. Then we can smile...and enjoy those big chocolate cookies with white sugar frosting...

at Mimi's Market on South Street in Lebanon and one at the Speedway on Madison Avenue in Southport, matched four out of five numbers and are worth $50 grand each!

All I know is that since you are reading these scribbles, neither one was me.

SPEAKING OF the lottery, my wife and I have been having a running debate for a long time about me throwing away money on it. To be clear, I don't buy scratch-offs or anything other than weekly Hoosier, Powerball and Mega Million tickets. It costs me $6 and I try to buy all the drawings each week.

Math wise, that works out to $14 a week because there are two Hoosier drawings, two Mega Millions and three Powerballs.

Of course I've never won the big prize – again, you're reading this, aren't you? But I have won as much as a hundred bucks and fairly frequently (I thought) won $10, $20, free tickets, etc.

So last year, to prove to my wife that I am indeed NOT throwing away money, I kept a spreadsheet – which kind of proved another point that my wife has made frequently, I am too anal about things.

I found out that I did not manage to buy tickets for every single drawing, but did for the vast majority. On the year, I spent $182 on the Hoosier Lottery, $203 on Mega and $276 on Powerball. That's $661.

On the winnings, I got $40 from Hoosier, $12 from Mega and $18 from Powerball. That's $70.

Sigh.
As in most things, my wife once again proved that she is not only beautiful, but much smarter than I am.

SEVERAL OF you have asked about my old pals, Honest Hoosier, John Hammer and Bubba Castiron and why they've been scarce of late. Well, there are a couple of reasons. I figure at some point, all things run their course so maybe these characters have? But tell you what, if you want to hear more from the guys, just let me know and I'll see what I can do.

IF YOU recalled those three famous names from Watergate, score a point for yourself! Sen. Ervin chaired the Watergate committee and was a Republican from North Carolina. Sen. Baker was from the great state of Tennessee and Judge Sirica was a U.S. District Court judge who abided over the whole mess.

By the way, it was this month in 1972 when Howard Hunt, G. Gordon Liddy and the Watergate burglars were indicted by a federal grand jury.

Wabash Shines in 2025 College Guide

Wabash College received top-10 rankings in 10 categories in The Princeton Review's 2025 college guide, which features 390 highly rated colleges and universities.

Wabash ranked third for Best Health Services and Most Active Student Government to go along with top-five rankings for Best Financial Aid (No. 5), Best Career Services (No. 5), Best Campus Newspaper (No. 5), and Professors Get High Marks (No. 5). The Princeton Review previously rated Wabash second nationally in Best Schools for Internships, fourth for Best Alumni Network, and No. 33 in Best Value Colleges for private schools.

Inclusion in The Princeton Review's Best 390 Colleges indicates that Wabash stands among the top 15% of more than 2,500 U.S.-based four-year colleges.

The review includes detailed accounts of the best schools with rating scores in eight general categories, including quality of life, campus life, extracurriculars, social scene, and town life. Wabash received scores of 98 (out of 99) in the categories associated with teaching, interesting faculty, and accessibility. Further, the institution received a 94 rating for financial aid and an 88 for admissions.

"Wabash always appreciates being included in the Princeton Review's college guide," said Wabash President Scott Feller. "The sheer number of top-20 rankings suggests that our students are happy, engaged, and take full advantage of all that Wabash has to offer — Greek life, theater, student journalism, and, of course, our spirited athletics program."

Now in its 33rd year of recognizing outstanding colleges and universities, The Princeton Review offers 50 ranking lists, each identifying the top 25 colleges nationally (of the 390 profiled) in those specific categories. The colleges included on these lists are those with a track record of student satisfaction since The Princeton Review surveys more than 160,000 students who rate and report on their own campus experiences through an 85-question survey.

"The Princeton Review rankings should grab the attention of every student who is putting the quality of his educational experience at the center of his college search," said Todd McDorman, Dean of the College and professor of rhetoric.

"The rankings, based on the actual experiences of students, affirm the quality of Wabash faculty in ratings such as 'Professors Get High Marks' and 'Best Classroom Experience and their renowned dedication in the rating for 'Most Accessible Professors.' It is gratifying to see my colleagues recognized for their work because I know how committed they are to the student and educational excellence."

The surveys address a range of topics that prospective students might find interesting or ask about on a campus visit, from academics and administration to amenities, and politics. Each ranking is based solely on student survey responses.

On average, The Princeton Review surveys more than 400 students per campus in an online format. Surveying is a continuous process where students submit surveys online from all schools included in the book. Those surveys can be completed at any time, though the system only accepts one survey from a student per academic year per school.

Wabash appeared in 40 percent of the 50 lists and ranked in the top 10 in 12 of those, including:

- #2 -Top 20 Best Schools for Internships (Private Schools)
- #3 - Best Health Services
- #3 - Most Active Student Government
- #4 - Top 20 Best Alumni Networks (Private Schools)
- #5 - Great Financial Aid
- #5 - Best Career Services
- #5 - Professors Get High Marks
- #5 - Best College Newspaper
- #6 - Most Accessible Professors
- #7 - Best Student Support and Counseling Services
- #8 - Lots of Greek Life
- #8 - Best Run Colleges
- #14 - Students Love Their School Teams
- #15 - Best Classroom Experience
- #21 - Happiest Students
- #23 - Best College Theater
- #25 - Lots of Race/Class Interaction
- #25 - Best Athletic Facilities
- #33 - Top 50 Best Value Colleges (Private Schools)

Wabash has been featured in every edition of The Princeton Review's college guide since the service was established in 1992.
