By The Numbers, a look at what's in the news . . . by the numbers. These are just numbers, not suggestions that they mean more or less than what they are. We do not suggest that one number is connected to another. These are simply facts with no extraneous details, bias or slanted reporting. To borrow (and perhaps mangle a bit) a quote from legendary fictional detective Joe Friday, it's just the numbers, ma'am!

Thank Goodness, it's almost over! (Wait, did we say that?) For good, bad or somewhere in between, this election is coming to a close . . . at least we hope so. Then again, both sides have an army of lawyers waiting in the wings so this just might play out a lot longer. At any rate, we're bringing back a look at how we elect presidents, the Electoral College . . . By The Numbers.

270 The magic number needed by either former President Donald Trump or current Vice President Kamala Harris to secure the Oval Office.

538 That's how many total Electoral Votes are available. The number of votes allocated to each state is based on the last U.S. Census and will remain the same through the 2028 election. Depending on the results of the 2030 Census, the numbers could change when we elect a president in 2032.

11 The number of Electoral Votes Indiana has.

Butch Hasn't Kicked the Bucket Yet

BUTCH DALE Columnist
I turned 76 on October 27th. It's difficult for me to fathom. I never imagined that I would make it this far. I have experienced several health problems, accidents and close calls through the years, most of which can be attributed to youthful inexperience and stupidity, not asking for help when I should have, getting in too much of a hurry and taking chances when the odds were not in my favor. And as you all know, sometimes "things just happen." Think back on your life. I know you will agree.

No, I don't foresee kicking the bucket anytime soon. Of course, one never knows what the next day brings, but I am actually in better health than I was 30 years ago when I was Sheriff. I haven't smoked in 24 years. I eat healthy and exercise every day. I feel more like I am 46 years old than 76 (as long as I don't see my face in the mirror). A few aches and pains now and then, but that's about it.

The older I get, the more I appreciate little things in life. When I shower each morning before heading off to work, I often linger a bit longer than I should. I recall the days as a child when we had no indoor bath or shower, and my little brother and I were bathed in a metal washtub. I also keep the thermostat turned up perhaps too high. The farmhouse where I grew up was extremely cold in the fall and winter months, especially in the upstairs bedroom where I slept. When it's bedtime now, I thank God I can sleep in a warm bed. We had no indoor toilet until 1954, when I was 6 years old. Yes, we had the good old outhouse. When I dress in the mornings, I have plenty of new clothes to wear. I remember the times when most of my clothes were hand-me-downs from older cousins. My folks bought me one pair of tennis shoes and one pair of jeans each fall before school began. I also recall that Mom often had to "stretch" the food for our family of five children, and a few years we received "government food." Perhaps that is why now, when shopping for groceries, I often buy too much.

Making a Little Noise

CARRIE CLASSON
The Postscript

The men who have been making the terrible noise are still at it. The construction on our building began in the early spring, before my husband, Peter, and I returned from Mexico. When we arrived, scaffolding had been set up all around the building and blue plastic had been taped over our windows to protect them from flying debris. Our balcony was unusable, and the driveway was blocked off, filled with piles of bricks.

And every morning at 8:00 exactly, they began to jackhammer out the bricks.

The project entailed removing rows of bricks from every side and every story of the building because water was getting in. Some sort of magic was performed beneath them (I am not an engineer, in case you were wondering) and new bricks were put in place. The loudest and longest part of this project was the removal of the bricks, but there was also grinding down of edges once the new ones were in, and some pressure washing and, throughout it all and at every stage, a tremendous amount of noise.

The building leaked. There wasn't much we could do.

I decided early on that I could not vacate to a coffee shop every time I needed to write. I don't like wearing earplugs, and I'm not sure they would have done much good. Instead, I wrote through the noise. If I had to talk to Peter, I would go to the room he was in and stand close to him, because inter-room hollering was no longer possible (which might have been one small ancillary benefit of the façade repair).

They were all guys, and they were all quite large. Hammering out bricks and replacing them with more bricks while on a narrow platform high in the air is serious work. These guys did it five days a week from 8 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon, taking only a half-hour off for lunch.

I always said "hello." They always apologized for all the noise—as if there was anything they could do about it. Sometimes I would thank them for the wake-up call. They always laughed and thanked me for being a good sport.

"We should get them snacks to thank them for their hard work," Peter said.

Peter believes every hardworking person deserves snacks. It is one of the many things I love about him. So I went to the bakery, and I bought a bunch of bars—brownies and lemon bars and Rice Krispies bars and pumpkin—and Peter and I delivered them one day when they took their short lunch break.

"I want a souvenir!" I told the foreman.

"What kind of souvenir?" he asked.

"I want a brick!"

"We've got bricks everywhere!" He laughed.

"Yes, but I want a signed brick. I want your autographs."

"Why would you want that?" he asked.

"I want it to remember this summer of noise!"

They all laughed, and just when we were getting ready to return to Mexico (which we usually think of as the noisier of our two homes), Peter said, "There's something for you outside the door."

And, of course, it was my brick, with everyone's name written on it. I was so pleased.

It reminds me of those hardworking guys outside my window, hanging off the side of the building day after day. It reminds me that, whatever hard work I think I am doing, there are much harder jobs out there. Sitting at my computer, putting up with a little noise, it reminds me that I have it pretty good.

*Till next time,
Carrie*

A Puzzling Column

DICK WOLFSIE
Funny Bone

Who will win the election on November 5? I don't know. Nor do you. Jeremiah Farrell, a former professor of mathematics at Butler University and creator of what is considered by many to be the greatest crossword puzzle ever, didn't know either, so he hedged his bet.

Jerry passed away in 2022, but he left behind what Hoosier Will Shortz called his favorite crossword puzzle of all time. This is quite a compliment from a man who edited and created thousands of these brain teasers.

The puzzle appeared in the New York Times on election day in November of 1996, the day of the Bob Dole and Bill Clinton presidential match-up.

Professor Farrell, an accomplished puzzle solver and creator, had done more than a few Sunday puzzles for The Gray Lady (The New York Times' nickname) and dozens of other publications. All Times' puzzles are carefully edited and scrutinized; and certain rules, both written and unwritten, must be followed.

That's why Jerry's entry caused quite a stir. One of the clues (39 across) read: Lead story in tomorrow's newspaper. It was a prediction of who would win. The uproar came from both Democrats and Republicans. It seemed like intentional bias, whoever they picked.

BOBDOLE or CLINTON. Note that both answers had seven letters. But how could they both work? That's where Jerry's genius was evident, as former colleague Professor Lacey Echols told me, "He was brilliant and always festering with ideas."

The puzzle had two correct ways of being solved. "BobDole elected" and "Clinton elected." All the down clues were designed so that two different solutions would work. Shortz called it an "amazing feat, possibly the most creative crossword ever."

Here are the clues:

39 Down: Black Halloween animal (Could be Cat or Bat)

40 Down: French word (Lui or Oui)

41 Down: Provider of support (IRA or Bra, and that's my favorite)

23 Down: Sewing shop purchase (Yarn or Yard)

27 Down: Short writings (Bits or Bios)

35 Down: Trumpet (Boast or Blast)

42 Down: Much debated political initials (NRA or ERA)

Most people who did the puzzle did not realize there were alternative answers that could spell BOBDOLE_ELECTED or CLINTON_ELECTED. As noted, many complained that this was an inappropriate clue, showing favoritism by the puzzle creator and The Times.

I created something similar with DTRUMP and HARRIS. Here's what I came up with.

Show of disapproval: Hiss or Diss

Body part: Arm or Toe

Informer: Rat (I only need one solution here)

A sports judge (Abbreviation): Ref or Ump

Type of group: Ilk or Mob

A close relative (Slang): Sis or Pop

How'd I do? Notice how the alternative spelling can give us both candidates: HARRIS or DTRUMP. Of course, I would also have to create the entire puzzle, but I'm 77, so I'm not sure I have the time.

So, who will win the election? I don't have a clue.

I have six.

My family had an oak crank-type wall phone until 1958. We were two-and-a-half rings on an eight party line. Now I can call anyone in the world in seconds on my $75 flip cell phone, and no, I do not want a smart-phone! Dad bought our first TV in 1952, and there were two or three channels to watch ... in black and white, and often "snowy" of course.

Now there are hundreds of channels, although I will admit that I very seldom watch TV at all today. I like to read each evening in the peace and quiet, as I often did as a youngster, while sitting alone in the front porch swing or up in the haymow watching the clouds drift by.

The family cars of my childhood were a 1947 Pontiac, followed by a 1955 Buick, and a 1963 Chevy station wagon, none of which were anything to brag about and were not dependable. Today my wife drives a newer 4WD SUV, which is highly reliable and can get through those. winter snow drifts on our country gravel road. But I am happy driving my old

Mercury and my "antique" Ford Ranger. We live in the house where my wife grew up ... a farmhouse built in 1890. No, it's not fancy, but I like it that way. I just would not feel comfortable living in a modern new house ... and the best thing ... I own it, and it's paid for! The house of my childhood was owned by our landlord

I am a product of the 1950s and early 1960s ... one of the many Baby Boomers who grew up and lived happy lives in the small towns and rural areas of Indiana. I don't need much in the way of materials things. I am happy with the tried and true basic necessities. And at age 76, I doubt that I will change. Every day I am thankful for everything I have, especially the simple things in life that many younger people take for granted. What about you?

Montgomery Medicine: Norovirus

JOHN R. ROBERTS, M.D.
Montgomery Medicine

Many people have been experiencing what's commonly called the "stomach flu" recently. This term, however, can be misleading. Unlike the seasonal flu that affects the respiratory system, the stomach flu, also known as viral gastroenteritis, impacts the digestive system. It's important to know that the flu shot only prevents respiratory influenza and doesn't protect against viruses that cause stomach symptoms.

Norovirus, the leading cause of viral gastroenteritis in the United States, is responsible for about 21 million cases annually, resulting in roughly 70,000 hospitalizations and around 800 deaths each year. Norovirus got its name from a 1968 outbreak at a school in Norwalk, Ohio, where it was first identified. The virus is remarkably hardy, able to withstand freezing temperatures, heat up to 140°F, and even resist low levels of chlorine in drinking water. This resilience makes it difficult to eliminate with standard sanitation, and noroviruses can even survive steaming, which is why they sometimes persist in foods like shellfish if not properly prepared.

Norovirus infection often comes on suddenly, with symptoms that include nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, and stomach pain or cramps. Diarrhea tends to be especially severe in children, and the resulting dehydration can be dangerous, particularly for the young and elderly. It's crucial to watch for dehydration signs such as dry mouth, dizziness, and reduced urination in those affected.

Norovirus spreads quickly and easily, especially in crowded places like schools, daycares, nursing homes, cruise ships, and hospitals. When an infected person vomits or has diarrhea, billions of virus particles are released, and swallowing even a small number—as few as 100 particles—can cause infection. The virus is transmitted by direct contact with vomit or stool from an infected person, by touching contaminated surfaces such as doorknobs, toys, or utensils, and by eating contaminated food or drinking contaminated water. Shellfish, in particular, are a common source. Additionally, infected individuals who handle or prepare food can spread the virus to others, leading to outbreaks in places like restaurants, school cafeterias, and at catered events.

Symptoms typically start 24 to 48 hours after exposure to the virus. Although most people are sick for only one to two days, norovirus can remain in the body for much longer. An infected person can be contagious from the moment they start feeling sick until at least three days after symptoms subside, and in some cases, they may remain contagious for up to two weeks after recovery. For this reason, children who have been ill should stay home from school for at least three days after symptoms improve, and anyone who prepares food should avoid working during this period as well.

There is no specific treatment for norovirus, but symptoms can be managed. The primary focus is to prevent dehydration. Drinking water is usually sufficient, but if the illness persists beyond a day, an oral rehydration solution like Pedialyte® may be helpful. A simple homemade solution can be made by mixing two teaspoons of salt and eight teaspoons of sugar into a two-liter bottle of water. Drinking small sips frequently is recommended over gulping large amounts at once. Fever can be managed with medications like acetaminophen or ibuprofen, but it's always best to consult a healthcare provider, especially when treating children, the elderly, or if symptoms are severe.

Preventing the spread of norovirus mainly involves practicing good hygiene. Regular handwashing with soap and warm water for at least 20 seconds is essential, especially after using the restroom, changing diapers, and before preparing food. If someone in your home is infected, surfaces should be disinfected with a bleach solution made by mixing one part bleach with nine parts water; allow the solution to sit for 10–20 minutes before wiping. Clothing or linens soiled by vomit or stool should be washed in hot water on the longest cycle and then dried in a dryer. Proper food handling is also important: wash fruits and vegetables thoroughly before eating or cooking, and ensure shellfish is cooked completely.

Most people recover from norovirus on their own. However, it's essential to seek medical advice if you notice signs of dehydration, such as dry mouth, dizziness, or reduced urination, or if the affected person seems unusually fatigued or has severe abdominal pain. Dehydration can be serious, especially in young children and older adults. While norovirus is unpleasant, understanding how it spreads and taking simple hygiene precautions can help reduce the chances of catching or spreading the virus.

Back in the Day with Butch Dale

Most of the farmers here in Montgomery County are finished harvesting their crops. But back in the day, corn was harvested by hand ... one stalk at a time, as the farmer walked down the rows, with his horse and wagon nearby, and he threw the shucked ears of corn into the wagon.

2024 Mazda MX-5 Miata Is the Pumpkin Spiced Cure for Some Driving “Me Time”

CASEY WILLIAMS
Auto Reviews

Life is tough. With busy kids, stressful work, and little respite for ourselves, we sometimes need a little “me time”. Whether you’re rolling into the office, going to collect offspring, or connecting your music library for a wicked weekend two-lane adventure, driving an engaging automobile can only make “you time” better – especially when your host is the 2024 Mazda MX-5 Miata.

Whether you call it “MX-5” or “Miata”, and either is fine, you know what it is: A classically inspired roadster with the reliability and efficiency of a Japanese compact. But, this generation’s more aggressive styling gives off vibes that are more MX-5 and less Miata.

Classic long hood, short deck proportions remain, but this Miata looks to be harboring some anger issues behind its squinty adaptive LED headlamps. The hood’s a little swoopier, fenders wrap more sensuously around 17” wheels, and the voluptuous rear ports inset round taillamps. It’s still friendly, beautiful, sexy, but also a little bit mischievous. I specially enjoy it in Aero Gray paint.

Once you fold yourself inside, our Grand Touring edition makes you feel special. Tan Nappa leather seats with cross-stitching, French-stitched dashboard, and body color door tops that simulate sheetmetal are pretty fancy – as are automatic climate control, Bose audio with headrest speakers, and heated seats. Safety tech includes blind spot, lane departure warning, and rear cross traffic alert systems.

There’s nothing better than looking beyond the classic analog gauges, out over the flared fenders, with hands grasping the perfectly-sized leather-wrapped steering wheel. Mazda’s decrepit joywheel infotainment controller remains, but you can also touch the dash-top screen for commands. Unlike many modern sports cars you wear like a scarf, the Miata’s low beltline still welcomes a relaxed arm. Given the tiny trunk, though, I’d pack a couple of duffels and little more.

Going for a drive brings my favorite part of the Miata: Its manually folding top. You don’t even have to get out of the driver’s seat to deploy it – any stop light will do. Flip the one header latch, toss it over your head, and hear it click. The top forms its own flush tonneau. Easy peasey.

You can get the Miata with an automatic transmission, but I’d lose a lot of respect for you if that’s what you chose because the six-speed manual is one of the most enjoyable click-click snick-snicks in the business. A light clutch is engaging during on backroad stress relief runs, but won’t wear you out in traffic.

So, put down the pumpkin spice café, click the stick, and rev out your aggression. Miata won’t mind.

The 2.0-liter DOHC four-cylinder engine whizzes out 181 horsepower and 151 lb.-ft. of torque. It has plenty of power for a lightweight sports car, but you’ll have to work to get it to the rear wheels. Fuel economy is rated a frugal 26/34-MPG city/highway, so feel free to grab another latte and take another lap.

That’s when you’ll understand what’s been the fuss over Miatas for the past 35 years. They aren’t Corvettes; ripping racetracks isn’t the point. They’re about feeling the car around you, the tight steering, delightful gauges, and feeling at one with an automobile. And, if that’s what you need to relive a little stress, then you deserve it.

You know what makes this dream even better? The Miata is no more expensive than a sporty Japanese compact like the Subaru Impreza or Honda Civic. Base models start at just $28,985, coming to $36,200 for our luxurious GT. Competitors include the Subaru BRZ, Toyota GR86, and BMW Z4.

Storm Forward!

Readers' Choice

Voting is under way in The Paper's ever-popular Readers' Choice promotion! This year, in order to open the ballot boxes to even more people, we are including the ballot in our Print AND Online Editions. And, in the spirit of votes coming out of suitcases after midnight, rigged elections and false claims, we are going back to the future with paper ballots only! No, we're not requiring voter registration or ID – heck, we still encourage everyone to vote early and vote often – but we are setting up the ballot so you can use pencil, pen, magic marker, blood from a turnip . . . whatever you like. Simply mark the box next to the person, place or thing you are voting for and send (or drop off) the ballot to The Paper of Montgomery County, 127 E. Main. St., Crawfordsville, IN 47933 – or email it to ttimmons@thepaper24-7.com. We'll tabulate everything and announce our winners at the end of the promotion! And be sure to watch for RC '24 ads in The Paper!
