Meet Adeline

Adeline is a 6 year old female red/white American Blue Heeler available for adoption from AWL since 11/8/24. Adeline loves going out for walks, frolicking in a fenced yard, and will gladly sit for treats. Adeline is looking for her best friend. Could that be you?

This brilliant idea came from a regular reader. At your funeral, do two things. First, have someone take the floral arrangement off the coffin and throw it in the crowd to see who is next. And second, give your cell phone to someone and ask them to text everyone after the service and thank them for coming.

Butch Remembers the "Full Service" Station

BUTCH DALE

Let's go back in time once again...You hop in the car to head out to the drive-in theater for family Columnist night...but the gas gauge shows you're low, so you pull into the local station to buy a few gallons. Since gas is only 26 cents a gallon, you have plenty of dough left for popcorn, candy and drinks during the movie.

As you pull in and drive over a rubber hose, a little bell dings inside the station to let the attendant, who is likely the owner, know you are there...and here he comes, wearing his shirt with the oil company logo patch, and with a big smile on his

"How can I help you today?"

"Hi, how ya doin' Fred? We're headed to the drivein...just need a couple gallons of regular, and could you check the passenger side rear tire? I think it might need a little air."

"Sure thing, Bob...happy to oblige. How's everything in your neck of the woods?"

Well folks, back in the good old days gas service stations were like that. They were "full service" stations. Not only did they put gas in your tank, they also checked your fluids...oil, transmission, battery, washer and radiator...but also cleaned your windshield, checked the hoses, belts and wiper blades, and aired up any tires that were low...all of this at no charge. Some stations even handed out S&H green stamps, which you could save to exchange for free items later. Most stations also gave out free road maps and matches, and a few even provided logo embossed ashtrays, drinking glasses or cups, and

A sign of the times . . . past.

The transactions were cash, with regular customers sometimes shouting out, "Just put it on my tab, and I'll be in next week to settle up."

In the small towns here in the county, there were often three or more of these full service stations. When the owners weren't pumping gas, they repaired vehicles, did maintenance work and fixed flat tires. They sold batteries, tires, and other automotive items. My hometown of Darlington, with 900 residents, had four of these stations when I was a youngster in the 1950s...Branstetter Phillips 66, Cox's Standard Oil, Endicott's Cities Service and Conrad and Gilliatt's Shell Oil. Inside most of these was a candy counter, bottled soft drink machine, a cigarette machine and a peanut dispenser, along with a few other "necessities." And of course there was a bench outside or an old sofa and chairs inside where customers could sit...to hear the latest news and gossip, discuss the basketball teams, talk about farming and tell the newest jokes. Most lady drivers stayed in their cars, but men would often come inside and spend time with the owner and other locals. A few loafed there for hours at a time, sometimes watching the owner work on cars.

Several teenage boys like to "hang out" at the stations, and a few lucky ones were hired to work there part-time. Little kids were also welcome. The owner aired up their bike tires, oiled the chain, tightened the handlebar...while kidding the tykes and offering up some sage advice. "Hey, now you shouldn't be looking at that Marilyn Monroe calendar in the back room...you're still wet behind the ears!"

When you need gas today, you pull into the nearest station, insert your debit card into the slot, fill up and leave. If your windshield is dirty, there might be a sponge on a mop handle and a squeegee next to the pump. I will admit that there are lots of items for purchase inside these "mini-mart convenience" gas stations, but it's highly unlikely you know anyone who works there. Many small towns don't even have a gas station anymore.

The old-time full service stations began to disappear in the 1970s. There are only a handful left, and none around here that I am aware of. It was very handy to have an attendant take care of your vehicle, but the best thing about the old stations was the personal service with people you knew and trusted. They not only wanted your business, they were also glad to see you and chat awhile. It was a different era. We will likely never see a time like that again...and that's a shame.

column, the League of Women Voters of Montgomery County overviewed the new "Future New Indiana Diploma" requirements and how the new requirements ask kids and their parents to pick tracks - academic, workforce or military. The three roads diverging in the first year of high school may fence students in while they are too young, making it so their education may underserve them for the coming decades of their lives.

The impact of these options means everything to Chip Timmons, dean of enrollment at Wabash College. His oldest child is a student at Wabash, and his youngest plans to join the workforce straight out of high school.

"When I look at them and consider how these curricular changes would have helped them, I see different benefits. My older son would have gained some hands-on skills and done things that were non-academic related. This would probably have helped him have an easier adjustment to being out on his own and developing life skills. While there's still a chance he could acquire these skills in other ways, it would have been good if he had learned how to write a check, assemble an engine or understand how things work."

Want to have a voice in your state government? There are few better ways than sitting down face to face with state senators and state representatives.

Although tickets are available, space is limited so please register as soon as possible to attend online at Crawfordsvillechamber. com. For more information regarding the breakfast or the chamber, please contact Stacy Sommer at ssommer@ crawfordsvillechamber. com

The breakfast takes place on the 3rd floor of Fusion 54 located at 101 W. Main St. in beautiful downtown Crawfordsville.

Back in the Day with Butch Dale

There were no cars around here in Montgomery County in 1900, and folks depended on their horse and buggy to travel about. But what if old Dobbin is lame? No problem, just hitch up old Bossy the cow!

His older son, a highly motivated college junior at Wabash, has always been academically focused, with a strong executive function and a clear trajectory toward graduate school and teaching.

"For my younger son, I believe he will join the workforce and find success early. I'm confident of that. But I wonder, why can't he be well-read while doing that? We live in Crawfordsville, where the Hispanic and non-native English-speaking population is growing. He would probably benefit from intensive language study beyond the absolute minimum required to check off that box," said Timmons.

Timmons' statements reveal his belief that education should aim to develop students holistically - not just for immediate career paths but to prepare them for all aspects of life, including parenting, civic engagement and career paths. He values a curriculum that fosters well-rounded individuals capable of long-term personal and professional success.

As for the impact on college-bound Hoosiers, he said, "The challenge Wabash is going to have is that there will be fewer people graduating from high schools in Indiana. There will be fewer men graduating with eyes on higher education and the type of student we want to enroll here."

Presently only 53 percent of Hoosier high schoolers pursue training or education after high school, according to the Indiana Capital Chronicle. While Indiana is graduating more students from high school, the number of graduates seeking posthigh school education in 2022 was down 6 percent in 2019 and down 12 percent from 2015.

Economics professor Kevin Mumford, also the director of Purdue University Research Center in Economics, has told Indiana lawmakers that Indiana's economic health is linked to the number of college graduates, especially since such graduates holders. Some of that message must have landed. This session, Terre Haute's Greg Goode (R) proposed legislation (SB 448), which would put a quota on public universities for their incoming first-year class students. Presently SB 448 would require 50 percent of freshmen be from Indiana. (For context: WFYI reports that "As of fall 2024, 55 percent of IU Bloomington's first-year class was from Indiana, while 41 percent of Purdue's first-year class were Indiana residents.")

"Kendra Leatherman, Purdue University's director of government relations, said Purdue actually admits a higher percentage of Indiana residents who apply versus the percentage it admits of out-of-state residents who apply," reported WFYI. "But, she stressed, the university can't fully control whether more in-state students enroll."

Not only are fewer Hoosier students pursuing any sort of vocational or academic training after high school, but many Hoosier students aren't prepared for the rigor of schools like Purdue. To succeed, they need Algebra I, II, Trigonometry and Pre-Calc, along with advanced science, college prep courses in a number of subjects and eight semesters of literature and English. (Purdue has reduced its foreign language requirements for graduation.)

Indiana is a "sleeping giant" in higher education, as Wabash College President Scott Feller told local legislators at MoCo's December legislative breakfast. This is particularly true when it comes to college partnerships. The state offers a generous grant program that makes college more affordable for Indiana residents, a model that is the envy of states across the country, Feller reminded our local representatives. The 21st Century Scholars program, in particular, is extraordinarily generous and helps countless students achieve their educational goals.

research institution, Notre Dame. Beyond these, the state is home to nationally recognized liberal arts colleges like DePauw, Rose-Hulman, Wabash and Butler, each with unique strengths in fields such as STEM and the arts. Butler, for example, stands out with its renowned Jordan College of the Arts. These seven institutions alone have national profiles and distinctive offerings, but Indiana's higher education landscape extends even further. The state is home to 26 other private colleges and Ivy Tech Community College, a far-reaching institution that provides critical workforce training and educational access across the state.

If Indiana backs away from diplomas that encourage post-high school training, even manufacturing companies will opt to build in other states. Manufacturing organizations value employees with the capacity to learn and run high-level automation and robotics. Without graduates who are willing to do post-high school training, the state will suffer trying to lure competitive manufacturing.

between economic development and human development. A degree should (and does) economically (and physically) improve the lives of those who invest the time and money. It doesn't have to break the bank, thanks to Indiana's excellent options. But one of the reasons a four-year (or higher) degree leads to higher salaries is that post-high school degrees help graduates develop the ability to think across functions and boundaries. Not only should college students have acquired the soft skills of attention, focus, collaboration, communication, professional presence, time management and self-regulation, they should have digested ideas across subjects and learned to make creative, unique connections. They should be able to solve unexpected problems not just professional problems, but interpersonal, intercultural and civic issues. As Timmons noted, "That's why colleges like ours try to bring in students from all over the country and all over the world, because there are benefits of having this, like cultural friction with different ideas that are shared in the classroom and living units." The world has changed around us. Technology and ideas have specialized. It's not a simple widget world anymore. High school training is no longer the gold standard for earning enough to live comfortably. Not everyone will earn a bachelor's degree or higher, but almost all should go through an education system that prepares individuals for a lifetime of learning, adaptability and growth. Educators know this. Now, how to bring leaders and the public together on this?
