Butch Says Bring Back McGuffey!

BUTCH DALE Columnist

How would you judge the reading skills of grade school children today compared to the past? And what about character and morals? Well, I can attest that many of today's kids have fewer reading skills, primarily because they don't read as much. Why not? Video games, TV, phones, computers, etc. Now as far as character and morals, the majority of children are doing just fine. But then there are those who leave a lot to be desired and are destined for trouble when they're older.

readers taught students the letters of the alphabet, phonics and sentence structure. The third grade reader taught the definition of words through vivid stories and lessons that children would remember, and were written at what is considered today the 5th and 6th grade levels. In those days the goal of public schools was not just academics, but also the teaching of morals, American values and Christian religious beliefs. The following is an example of a lesson from a McGuffey third grade reader. The lesson is entitled, "When to Say No."....

"Though 'No' is a very little word, it is not always easy to say it; and in the not doing so, often causes trouble. When we are asked to stay away from school, and spend in idleness or mischief the time which ought to be spent in study, we should at once say 'No.' When some schoolmate wishes us to whisper or play in the schoolroom, we should say 'No.'"

To recap, I offered a tip of the seed corn cap (as my pal Honest Hoosier might say) to new Indiana Gov. Mike Braun for replacing the Diversity-Equity-Inclusion push with MEI - Merit-Excellence-Innovation.

The big pushback was that Braun opened the floodgates to discrimination and that his new MEI initiative set back the Hoosier State by

Lafayette Meteorite: A Piece of Black History

The League of Women Voters, open to men as well as women, is a nonpartisan, multi-issue political organization that encourages informed and active participation in government.

In 1929, someone opened a drawer in Purdue's biology department and realized a corn-pone-sized rock, glassy-black-like with thin visible flow lines and a glint of gold on one side was not an ordinary Earth rock. They packed it up and sent it to Chicago's Field Museum for identification.

Officials at the museum confirmed it to be a meteorite. Its minerals didn't match Indiana's and its exterior showed signs that it survived the extreme heat of coming through Earth's atmosphere at high speeds. In the 1980s, gases within it - and other rare meteorite materials - were matched to samples brought back from NASA's Viking expeditions to Mars.

It returned in 2019 for Purdue's Homecoming, but its journey has layers of mystery.

"1.3 billion years ago, it flowed as a lava flow on the surface of Mars," according to Purdue professor Anthony Freed. "700 million years ago, it was immersed in salt water, because we can tell by the way the minerals are altered, and there's actually still salt in it. 10 million years ago, an asteroid hit the surface of Mars and actually knocked it off of the surface into orbit around the Sun. And 2,900 years ago, it intercepted Earth's orbit and fell through our atmosphere."

Then it ended up in a drawer at Purdue. It didn't walk its way into the drawer. And as fascinating as the clues about Mars locked inside are to science, so also are clues about how it may have ended up at the university; clues that reveal more through Indiana's agricultural and black history.

Thanks to pig vomit and scientific sleuthing by a curious researcher at the University of Glasgow, some connections credibly link the Lafayette Meteorite to one of four black students at Purdue early in the 20th century.

The rock's history began with an intriguing legend: a black student at Purdue University supposedly witnessed the meteorite's fiery descent, retrieving it from a muddy pond where it landed. But with no records to confirm this tale, the truth seemed lost to time.

Sen. Deery Shares Update

SPENCER DEERY

Fighting to Protect Indiana Water: One of the Senate's priority bills, Senate Bill 4, would establish a permitting system and regulatory process to move water out of one community and into another. The bill is well intended, and the mere fact that it is now a Senate priority shows how far we have come in making our case that such protections are needed. As a member of the Senate Committees on Utilities, I worked closely with the author to add some needed improvements such as a clarification that the regulations would apply to the LEAP project, and the requirement that a permit only be issued if it's in the public interest. I also added a stipulation that a permit can be revoked for violating its terms.

Despite these upgrades, I do not believe the bill is ready for law, and I voted against it in committee with the pledge to keep working with the author to improve it enough that I can feel like it's worth enacting.

LEADING THE Governor to the State of the State: On Wednesday, I was selected to be one of a few lawmakers to lead the new governor into the House Chamber for his State of the State address. I was honored to be a part of the tradition and ceremony, and I look forward to working with Gov. Braun to provide property tax relief, invest in a healthier Indiana and support the next generation of Hoosiers.

CELEBRATING Purdue Engineering: On Tuesday, 15 Purdue Engineering students joined me on the Senate floor to pass a resolution honoring the 150th anniversary of Purdue Engineering.

SPEAKING TO Water and Soil Advocates: This week I gave speeches at the annual Soil and Water Conservation Conference followed by another speech at a Water Stewardship event held at the Statehouse and sponsored by Indiana Conservation Voters.

PUSHING MY bills forward: I also presented two of my bills in committee hearings and passed another one out of the Senate. Read more about those bills below.

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE: This week, some of my bills moved through the legislative process. Here is a quick update.

Two bills pass the full Senate

- Senate Bill 121 would protect our rivers from destructive net fishing practices stemming from our country's failed immigration policies. It passed the Senate Thursday with bipartisan support.
- Senate Bill 255 would help our schools recruit more qualified STEM teachers and require schools to change their policies on bullying investigations to prioritize parental rights. It unanimously passed the Senate Tuesday and now moves to the House of Representatives for further consideration.

Committee update

- Senate Bill 249 would make it easier for school corporations to give their top teachers and the teachers working in shortage areas a meaningful salary raise. It was heard during a meeting of the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development Wednesday.
- Senate Bill 505 would allow emergency responders to transport individuals to a health care facility, mental health facility or urgent care facility that can provide the patient appropriate and necessary treatment. It unanimously passed the Senate Committee on Health and Provider Services Wednesday and has been recommitted to the Senate Committee on Appropriations for further consideration.

IMPROVING government efficiency: Over the last few years, Senate Republicans have supported many government reform measures aimed at cutting waste and holding our state government accountable for how it invests taxpayers' hard-earned dollars.

You deserve to have a responsive and responsible state government, which is why Senate Republicans are prioritizing Senate Bill 5 this session.

SB 5 would ensure our state continues to responsibly invest taxpayer dollars by:

the Indiana Legislature are once again trying to take public notices away from your friendly neighborhood newspapers. The hired hands cite declining circulation, costs and, amazingly, ease of access.

Here're some facts.

- First, no arguments on declining print subscriptions. That's nothing new – and again, our friends in Indianapolis have pounded on this fact for years. But what they fail to mention is the exploding digital side of newspapers. For example, here in Crawfordsville we have almost 10 times as many digital subscribers as we do print. Add to that the reach of our website and it's pretty astounding.

- Costs? I say this with all due respect, but when's the last time our government at almost any level did something better and cheaper than the private sector? This is another good example. The state wants to create a website for public notices. That means they'll have to pay someone to do that and they'll have to pay for the online platform.

Why do that when the Hoosier State Press Association already does it – at no additional cost at www.publicnoticeindiana.com ?

Plus, and I've made this point for years – public notice ads cost less than 1 percent of government budgets. Way less!

- Ease of access? OK, I get the concept that having one website means you just have to click one time. But what happens when you get there? It'd be like looking for a needle in a haystack of needles. Public notices being published on our pages means you may have to turn five or six pages, but it's nothing like a gazillion megabytes of data to sift through.
- Last point – and again, something said in this space many times. Imagine you have a teenage daughter who asks if her boyfriend can come to the house to study. Then imagine if she says they're going to study in her room instead of the dining room table. Then imagine they close the door. Suddenly a healthy situation goes from warm and fuzzy to downright alarming.

It's all about transparency and trust. And the more transparent things are, the easier it is to trust. If the government is allowed to manage their own public notice ads with no independent third party like a newspaper, how warm and fuzzy does that feel?

LEST YOU think all I do is gripe about our good folks in Indianapolis, here's a tip of the seed corn cap to Indiana Secretary of State Diego Morales. He has his enemies, but I like the fact that he's not just sitting behind a desk in Indianapolis. He's out and about and visiting Indiana counties and talking to common folks like you and I.

Haters got to hate, but I appreciate his efforts!

THIS IS American Heart Month and as a guy with a pretty good sized horizontal scar on his chest, please take it from me that heart health is nothing to sluff off.

- Watch a 60-second video to learn Hands-Only CPR
- Find a Heartsaver™ certification course near you

By the way, the first Friday in February is Wear Red Day in honor of the month. Hope you join me in painting the town, or at least our attire that day, red!

EDDIE ADAMS was a photographer for The Associated Press after serving with the United States Marine Corps in Korea. You may not know his name, but if you are of a certain age (and by reading these scribbles chances are you are), you'll likely remember the photo in 1968 of a South Vietnamese soldier shooting a Viet Cong captain in the side of the head on a Saigon street. Adams won the Pulitzer Prize in 1969 for that photo.

More than anything though, it is a stark statement on the difference between the world we grew up in and the one we live in today. We saw images of war on our TV sets every night and no one warned us beforehand that this might be disturbing.

That's not a slam on anyone today. But the world is cold and cruel in many places and ignoring, hiding or downplaying it doesn't do anyone any good.

"When we are tempted to use angry or wicked words, we should remember that the eye of God is always upon us, and we should say 'No.' When we have done anything wrong, and are tempted to conceal it by falsehood, we should say 'No, we cannot tell a lie; it is wicked and cowardly.' If we are asked to do anything which we know to be wrong, we should not fear to say 'No.' If we thus learn to say 'No,' we shall avoid trouble, and be always safe."

No child is perfect. Kids are going to make mistakes. That is just part of growing up. As a former teacher and police officer, I can tell you that the majority of children who get in trouble end up in that predicament because they refuse to say "No" when tempted by their peers. School suspension, underage drinking, drug use, vandalism and stealing . . . all of these and more . . . could have been avoided if they had been taught to stand up to the troublemakers and have the courage to say "No."

The McGuffey readers were used during a time in our country in which society was composed of a relatively homogenous Christian population. America today is a pluralistic society of many religious beliefs and values. But don't you think that such a lesson as the one above would serve our young students well? The peer pressure that children face is constant and unrelenting, much more so today than in the past, because of social media and TV, and it starts at a young age.

These readers developed advanced reading skills at an early age. And the stories in these early grade school books also taught other good personal habits, such as work ethic, honesty, civic duty, wise use of time, kindness to others, respect to elders, polite manners and trust . . . just to name a few. Since fewer children today attend church or Sunday school, perhaps it is time that the McGuffey reader's stories and lessons, or similar ones, be incorporated into the educational process. We owe it to our children. We owe it to society.

Sweet Reads at the Library

MEGAN TAYLOR
Guest Columnist

If entering the month famous for romance and candy hearts has got you in the mood for a sugary sweet rom-com, the library has a whole display of them ready to check out on our second floor. We've got all the top authors of the genre from Emily Henry to Jasmine Guillory and Ali Hazelwood.

Emily Henry's "Book Lovers" (FIC Hen) is a delightful enemies-to-lovers romance that is heartfelt and full of chemistry and witty dialog. Of course, it is perfect for book lovers! A literary agent whose life is all about books and her work nemesis, a surly book editor, keep meeting again and again with results that surprise them both. Ali Hazelwood's "Love Theoretically" (FIC Haz) is another best-selling enemies-to-lovers romance, this time with rival physicists, for a steamy STEM story.

Jasmine Guillory's "Drunk on Love" (FIC Gui) is set in Napa Valley wine country and is a fabulous modern day romance full of chemistry bubbling between the two main characters. Trish Dollar's "Off the Map" (FIC Dol) takes place all over as her main character travels the world alone until a wrong turn brings her right to a new travel companion. For nature lovers, Sarah T. Dubb's "Birding with Benefits," (FIC Dubb) offers a slow-burn, opposites-attract tale that explores the thrill of finding new love.

If you want a little edge with your sweet, check out Tessa Bailey's "My Killer Vacation" (FIC Bailey). An elementary teacher ends up working together with a bounty hunter to solve a murder, on what was meant to be a relaxing Cape Code vacation. This opposites-attract tale delivers clever humor and a mystery along with its scorching romance.

Blending sweet with supernatural, April Asher's "Not the Witch You Wed" (FIC Asher Supernatural v.1) explores the relationship between a witch and a shifter, who discover that magic doesn't make love any easier. This is the first of the "Supernatural Singles" series.

For historical romance, Evie Dunmore's "Bringing Down the Duke," (FIC Dun) takes the reader to England, 1879, where a vicar's daughter takes on a powerful duke. This is the first of the "A League of Extraordinary Women." Another historical romance, Suzanne Allain's "The Ladies Rewrite the Rules" (FIC Allain) takes the reader just a bit further back in time to Regency England, where a young widow takes on high society. If you love Jane Austen, this one is for you.

These titles are on display until the end of the month. Come in and check out a few with your library card. Many are also available to check out digitally on our free Libby app. Our regular open hours are Monday-Thursday 9 a.m.-9 p.m., Friday-Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m. and Sunday 1-5 p.m.

Back in the Day with Butch Dale

County and state highway departments have modern and up-to-date equipment nowadays. But back in the day, most of the work was done by hand. Shown above is an Indiana state highway crew who had finished work on State Road 47 in the 1930s. You might notice that the truck had solid rubber tires!

2020, while analyzing a tiny fragment of the Lafayette meteorite, she stumbled upon an unexpected compound – deoxynivalenol (DON), commonly known as vomitoxin.

"Most of them [compounds in the meteorite] had really long, boring chemistry data-type names but one was called a vomitoxin which I thought sounded cool so I started looking into it," O'Brien recalled. Her serendipitous discovery set off a chain of interdisciplinary detective work. Vomitoxin, or DON, is produced by a fungus that infects grain crops, causing severe illness in animals – particularly pigs. But how did this earthly contaminant end up on a Martian rock?

O'Brien reached out to Dr. Marissa Tremblay, an assistant professor at Purdue, to dig deeper. Together with university archivists, they pieced together a compelling narrative.

Historical records revealed significant crop blights in Indiana in 1919 and 1927, coinciding with reported fireball sightings in the region. These dates aligned perfectly with the presence of four black students at Purdue during that era: Julius Lee Morgan, Clinton Edward Shaw, Hermanze Edwin Fauntleroy and Clyde Silance.

While we may never know for certain which of these students made the extraordinary discovery, O'Brien's research has shed new light on this long-standing mystery.

"Lafayette is a truly beautiful meteorite sample which has taught us a lot about Mars through previous research," she noted. "So, for that alone, they deserve the credit, right? You then add in the fact that they were an African-American student at a university that had so few. We all know the stories of racism in 1920s America."

This fascinating blend of planetary science, agriculture and social history demonstrates the unexpected connections that can emerge from scientific inquiry. The Lafayette meteorite, once a silent artifact, now tells a rich story of cosmic journeys, agricultural challenges and the often-overlooked contributions of black students in early 20th century America.

As we continue to explore the mysteries of Mars, the Lafayette meteorite serves as a reminder that sometimes, the key to unlocking the secrets of distant worlds can be found in the most unlikely places – even in the biology of pig digestion.

A note on Black History Month. It is a national tradition founded by historian Carter G. Woodson, Ph.D. in 1926. What began as Negro History Week to educate people on the contributions of black Americans in science, arts, politics and religion developed into a national month of uncovering more about historical contributions. In 1975, President Gerald Ford became the first president to officially proclaim Black History Week. The following year, February was chosen as Black History Month because it was the birth month of Abraham Lincoln and the chosen birthday month of Frederick Douglass.
